Though Mirai's targeting of Midori may be a cover-up for something bigger, there may still be the threat of retaliation against her parents. If it has not been done so already, I think that it may be prudent to either strengthen security for them or perhaps to even move them to a safer residence on the QB corporation's property; if they get suspicious, say it's a pilot program for employee housing, or somesuch.

"I don't see the reason to increase the security around Hanegawa's parents, Matsuda, but I'll see what I can do. Wakaba Mirai notwithstanding, it's been relatively peaceful here in Mitakihara ever since you left." A moment of silence as Kyuubey glances at something offscreen, before reaching forward and tapping at something below your line of sight with a paw. "But it's the prudent thing to do, I suppose. COnsider it done."

Another moment, and it's then that he glances at you strangely. "...You're asking for the two best Eversors under my employ to be a part of your retinue, Matsuda. The Eversor Rank Leader and her second, at that." It's then that you see the Incubator seemingly frown at the screen, before shaking its head. "Well, I'm not all that against it. You will need protection, and the two of them work well enough as a team. However, you do realize that Sayaka has volunteered to retire you twice, now? I rather doubt she'd take well to the idea of being responsible for you, if she even considers it at all. I'd suggest picking someone else."

You shake your head. It's either both of them or none at all.

"...Very well. I'll see about the paperwork." Kyuubey lets out another one of his sighs, before turning to the side again. "Yes, yes, just another moment, please. Let me talk to my Warmaster in peace."

Your boss seems to be getting nagged by his fellow mutant cats. Probably time for you to end this call.

You call his attention, and he blinks at you.

"Yes, Matsuda? What is it this time?"

You smile slightly at the bastard mutant cat and wish him to have a nice day.

The moment of silence that followed afterwards seem to stretch on forever, before Kyuubey coughs. When he speaks, his words are tinged with an almost palpable confusion.

"...Yes. I...I gather I will. Likewise, I suppose, Matsuda." A moment. "Sever the connection."

The screen goes blank, and there's a click as the call ends.

And Kharn laughs, nearly choking on her cigarette's fumes while you yourself lean back on your chair, joining your former friend in hilarity.

That was almost worth it.

"Well, that was nostalgic, I admit," Kharn chuckles, wiping a tear away with a black fleshmetal claw. "Ah, now you are learning, Murderface. Sometimes, Kyuubey needs a bit of a ribbing. He is always stiff and formal sometimes! But, ah, I think we are lucky to get someone like him." She nods to herself. "Of all the other Incubators, it is strange, but he seems the most human." It's then that she laughs, again. "To an extent."

Well, that's true enough. He's human enough to warrant your irrational hate.

You rise out of the chair a bit shakily, and Kharn offers you a hand for support. You take her hand - noting how her long, unnatural fingers completely dwarf yours - and with a few near-stumbles, you both make it out of the communications room, walking side by side. Back to the living quarters.

"So, tomorrow is treatment day. It will be before breakfast, better so that you do not throw up as much during it." Kharn grins at you. "Now, ah, I will be honest, Murderface. You may want to spend night doing something...memorable, if anything." Her playful smile falls, replaced with a completely serious look. "We do not know what will happen, tomorrow. So...maybe you would like to spend some time with Midori, eh?"

How do you respond?

Mere moments before you utter your deadpan reply to your former partner's none-too-subtle way of getting you to sleep with your subordinate do you feel her entire skeletal hand close over your skull, the cold metal of her fingers clamping around your scalp. Making you feel like a prize in one of those UFO catcher machines you see in the arcade.

"Hahaha! That is very funny! Very funny, Murderface! Funny joke!" Kharn's grin is wide as she gives you a little shake, but with you in such a precarious position and the red dots in her black eyes focusing on yours like twin lasers, you begin to realize that there may be more to Kharn besides a friendly face and a cheerful accent. It's the second time, maybe, ever since you landed here in Siberia, that you felt that invigorating twinge of fear when you first laid eyes at the Ninth Incubator's former proxy.

But as soon as she does this, Kharn lets go of you - but not before giving you a rather affectionate, almost sisterly slap upside the head.

"This is this and that is that, Murderface!" Kharn says, and for the first time you hear an exasperated note to her voice. You glance back at her just as the elevator the two of you have just stepped in lurches in its journey ever downward. "This is no joking times! Did not you hear her confess to you, in front of her friend, about to kill her? I was there! You cannot say you did not hear, or if you forgot, because I was there too!"

Kharn steps forward, prodding your chest with a clawed finger. "This may be last time she will see you before a month, that is very real possibility! Having some common sense, Murderface!"

You blink up at your former partner in silence, before frowning.

How do you respond?

"You are asking me?" Kharn seems to lose a bit of her momentum at this, a thoughtful expression on her face. "Well, for difficult situations like this, you use your tongue. See?" She opens her mouth, and you spend a couple of moments watching your former partner demonstrate a particularly tricky move that you're sure is impossible without a tongue as long or as flexible as hers. A move that you're positive you saw somewhere else. "Awound, zen in. Awound, zen in." She closes her mouth, smiling. "There, did you get that? I am not going to repeat that again, it is too embarrassing."

You shake your head, still somewhat stunned at that display. The elevator once more lurches, before grinding to a halt - and you turn to make a beeline for your room, to try and forget about just what Kharn implied you should do to your subordinate.

Does she think you can actually do something like that? The sheer lunacy of it. The audacity.

Your tongue isn't anywhere near as long as hers! Not even a third!

"Alright, alright, now that is my joke." Kharn says as she pulls you back into the elevator, turning you around to face her. "No, Murderface, I am not telling you to have sex with her, even if she is cute and she would probably let you. There must be desire on both sides, if there is only one then that is sure way to ruin love." She shakes her head.

"All I am asking is that she considers you as someone very important to her. Naturally she is concerned with what is happening to you, and even if she is trying to be strong for you by not showing it, there are times when you need to allow her to rest. Let her be weak, eh? Even for a moment."

"Yes! How you are calling it...skinship! Yes, that is important!"

Skinship. Right. The excuse perverts use.

Calling this situation delicate is like saying the ocean is wet. She's in a fragile way, but I'm not sure if encouraging it would really help her in the long-term. A thing like that happened in the past, and it ended badly for both parties.

There are issues that are clouding the situation. From the way you did that tongue-thing, I'm sure that you're at least marginally aware of how complicated it is right now.

>> ☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/10/12(Wed)15:02 No.21070604

"Honestly? Truly?" Kharn echoes as she places both clawed hands on your shoulders. "No, Murderface. No. Neither of us deserve what we have, right now. You and me...we are marked, you realize?" A small smile curls her lips. "We are monsters, forsaken daughters of the Blessed Lady or Faust or whatever she calls herself now. We are dangers to ourselves and those who embrace us as friends. Even those who are Magical Girls, themselves. We are destined to die with a smile on our lips, with the corpses of our enemies strewn all around us."

Your former partner takes a deep breath, before letting it out in a sigh. "But that does not mean that we cannot try to fight fate, at least. See if we can delay it, one day at a time. Enjoy what time we have left, and ensure that those who will be sent to slay us have good memories to remember us by." She nods at you, before patting away imaginary lint and snow from your shoulders. "So for now, I think it is a good choice, at least, to be the...Chiaki Matsuda that Midori adores, if only for tonight. It may not be the one she loves, but at least it is something."

It's then that Kharn yawns, covering her mouth rather coquettishly with a clawed hand. "Mnah, do not worry about complicated. Midori is smart enough to know what you are doing. She has more common sense than you, in fact, and it shows." Your former partner smiles sleepily. "In any case, whatever you decide to do, I wish you nothing but the best. Honor and courage, Murderface." And with that, your former partner trudges out of the elevator before you, feet clanking briefly on the elevator floor's steel grating before being muffled by the living quarter's carpet, leaving you alone to stew in your thoughts. You hear her yell something in Russian - and Souji's shouted reply comes back.

What do you do?

You grind out the stubby remains of your cigarette against the elevator doors before flicking the extinguished butt towards the direction of the trashcan that Kharn had bounced a can off Souji's head into, at the same time mulling over just what your former partner had just told you. Kharn...well, if there's anyone who would know about these things, it's her. It's not like you got into this career expecting a quiet retirement somewhere idyllic, right?

Well, you don't really remember how you got into this in the first place. But that never seemed to matter then, it doesn't matter now.

You make your way towards the cluster of doors at the far end of the living quarters. Behind one of the doors, you can hear Kharn's and Souji's voices, muffled, low. Whispering in conversation, broken up by what seems like soft laughing in Kharn's part, and grumbling in Souji's. You decide not to eavesdrop and leave the two alone - Kharn, at least, deserves that much.

You turn towards the door of Misaka's room, and carefully, slowly, twist the doorknob in your grip. The metal handle creaks, but only slightly. You push the door forward, just a crack - and peek through it to see Misaka, buried underneath the covers up to her chin, arms around Big Pete. Her labcoat strewn on the floor beside her bed.

Careful not to make too much noise, you walk in, pick up her lab coat, and slowly fold it into a somewhat-neat pile your arms dealer could wear again without it being too rumpled. Watching Misaka's peaceful, tranquil face as you do so.

You leave after giving her a gentle pat on the head. You'll tell her that she was a good girl tomorrow, you promise.

You manage to leave without waking her. At least that's something.

>> ☐ Deculture 10/10/12(Wed)16:22 No.21071347

>>21071334

Your visit to Misaka done, you make your way towards Midori's room. You reach out for the doorknob, your fingers curling over it.

Every single Magical Girl is living on borrowed time. A Magical Girl's documented life expectancy varies wildly; depending on what kind of Incubator she's contracted with and what wish she traded her immortal soul for, it could range anywhere from sixteen minutes to three years, at the maximum.

With enough common sense and a healthy sense of acceptance to the inevitable existential shithole she'd signed up for, she'd be lucky to add a couple more years to her total. Unless, of course, something like this happens to her, which in case there's really no reason for her to start planning for her birthday, much less thinking about what to wear next week. Because as far as she's concerned, it's up in the air.

Midori...well, you're not too sure what to make of her. Sure, she'd been just a bit too clingy after Kyuubey made her your subordinate. There was that thing with her doujin, which you...if you're honest, you had a bit of fun torturing her with. But she did help you out when you needed it the most. She turned her back on her friend - said friend having been sent to kill her, of course - when she was asked to come back. Midori held onto you when you had completely lost control of yourself.

People like that don't come around often, you think.

You push the door open, slowly. Stepping in as you do so, making do with the least bit of entryspace so as not to make the door hinges creak any more than they have to.

You glance at the scarred Shield clamped tight on your right arm. It's clicking again, faintly this time, as if quietly reminding you that it's there, begging to be used. You idly wonder, then, just exactly what sort of wish you made that got you something like this.

Did you ask for a way to stop everything around you, completely, so that you could catch up somehow? Or was it a request to be able to skip forward in time, in your impatience to see what was ahead, not wanting to bother with all the rest?

Or was it a wish about trying to return to the past, to fix some past mistake?

Whatever it was...well. You could have wished for something else, maybe.

Something definitely a bit more magical. And practical.

The Shield winks out of existence, along with the rest of your costume, as you cancel your transformation. Leaving you in only...well, your glasses, as you stand by Midori's bedside. The air tingling slightly with spent magic as your Soul Gem solidifies into a silver ring that clasps around your left ring finger.

A rustle of bedclothes and some careful maneuvering, and you manage to slide underneath the covers. Midori's back is soft and warm, smooth where the bandages covering her wounds aren't - and it's with a tentative squeeze of her shoulder that you gently try to wake her, without being too rough.

Any other person, you'd have slapped them awake.

"N-ngh...M-Matsuda-sempai...?" Midori murmurs after a moment, not rolling over to face you, but her hand slowly reaching up to touch yours, on her shoulder. The bandages wrapping her fingers scratchy, stiff. "Is...d-do you want me to get you anything, sempai?"

Her voice is thick with sleep and you can faintly hear the slur of painkillers in her words, and here she is asking what she can do for you.

How do you respond?

You take off your glasses and carefully fold them, before placing them on the bedstand beside the bed itself. With that done, you scoot over just a bit closer to the half-asleep, half-awake Callidus, before burying your face into her back.

...She's really warm, this girl. Her hair smelling faintly of some sort of fruity shampoo, you can't place just what. Something citrusy? Lime, maybe?

This act provokes a gasp from Midori, however. "Sempai? Are...are you sure? M-maybe I could get a drink from the pantry--"

You slide your arm around her waist before gruffly telling her to shut up. She needs her sleep, and so do you.

"But I..." Her voice catches slightly in her throat. "I-I don't have any clothes on..."

If that was an issue to you, then you would have done something about it yesterday.

"..." A moment of silence, before Midori lets out a small sigh. It sounds almost wistful, at he same time pleased. Her hand reaches down to clasp yours, at her waist, before pulling you slightly closer to her, making you hug her just a bit tighter.

"...I'm sorry, Matsuda-sempai. Have a good night's rest."

You close your eyes as you finally allow yourself to relax.

You manage to thank Midori Hanegawa just before sleep overcomes you.

Your dream is of her dying, but you feel that it'll work out okay in the end.

Loathing inking with the burning fiery passion of a thousand suns as I do, what I do is crank up the rough pencils to 192 Brightness, do a 127H 255S colourize pass on it to get everything pale Cyan, print it out, and then go over the lines again using a 0.3 mechanical pencil.

You can then pull the Cyan out easy, once you scan it back in. It's not quite inking, but it produces decent results.

Probably! It's mostly just at the moment I have Coursework. And also Work work. Is kinda restricting my personal-amusement-art time pretty harshly.

After spending seven hours setting up shader networks for reeeeeally pretty procedural planets (when you are supposed to be doing something else entirely), and then two hours doing the thing you were supposed to be doing in the first place, and then another two or three hours dicking around with MySQL, the level of enthusiasm for art diminishes to below the level of enthusiasm for sleep.

So I'mma just satisfy myself with the bluelines for now. Only place the tablet makes a particularly HUGE impact on my workflow is the shading/highlight passes. I'll drop a tenner on an adaptor for the Christmas Break or something.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/18/12(Thu)12:49 No.21179458

You are a Magical Girl.

You should be sleeping right now. Or rather, you should have been sleeping three hours ago.

Not for lack of trying, of course. The room you're in might be slightly colder than what you're used to, but it's not as if you didn't have covers - or a very warm and very naked fellow magical girl - to warm you up. And you did fall asleep, after a fashion, only to wake up thirty minutes later with a dull pain throbbing at the back of your eyes. The memory of a black-eyed smile framed by soft pink hair teasingly tugging at the edges of your sleep-addled mind.

You should really have a talk with Pinky someday.

If she wants to play games with you, fine. If she wants you to go on her glorified fetch quest, fine.

But she should at least let you get a decent night's sleep.

Unable to sleep and unwilling to do anything that may end up waking your subordinate - who seriously looks like she needs the sleep, what with the bandages and all - you've managed to fidget carefully into a sitting position, and fished your smartphone from your inventory.

You've wanted to peek at that strange diary app that you've been feeding passwords into, and in return had given you cryptic diary entries that did not seem to be entries at all, but rather messages that spoke of...well, strange things. About a suit of armor. About Pinky. About Kharn. Things you should know, but forgot. Things you didn't know, and only knew about after a while or so. Things you felt that you were better off not knowing.

You idly fantasize about calling Iori at this time of night, but it's not like the signal's any good. Zero bars, not even the merest flicker of it.

It's strange, then, that the SMS app of your smartphone has that little circle on its upper right corner, declaring that you have one unread message.

Frowning - an unlit cigarette between your lips - you tap at the app's icon, bringing up the screen.

It's...it's from that unlisted number, again. The one that sent you that message, way back in Iori's suite. In Midori's illusion. Asking you to wake up. The message before that told you to give up, and move on.

The message now was no different, no less cryptic.

No less irritating.

>No matter what you do, the outcome will be the same.

As suggested before, we send a reply as our first step of doing that. We also share this SMS with Kharn and other people we trust, not least of which Midori. However, this must remain a secret from QB. Use our Warmaster-in-training authority if necessary.

Tempting as it is to rise to the bait - and it takes all too little for you to do so, really - you tap out a question instead. One that you should've asked a long time ago, before this whole gleaming buttershit involving golden crap started.

>Who the hell are you?

You tap at the SEND button, ignoring that small and often-ignored logical part of you that said that there is no way that message is going through. Kharn said it herself - if the reception inside the base didn't suck, what with you being deep underground, then any outgoing signal would probably be heavily dampened to the point of uselessness. But logic, right now, clearly wasn't working, with this nameless ray of sunshine able to send you a message.

The message goes through.

And the reply pops up immediately after. Surprise surprise, it's as cheerful as ever.

> My identity is not important. Only my message is important.

Time for tin-foil hat conspiracy meta-message reading: Benefactor edition!

> My identity is not important. Only my message is important.

Identity of this person would help us know his/her/its motivations, but we can already glimpse into that from what it is telling us. Otherwise, they don't want to tell us more than this, because then we would start to get a coherent picture of what he/she/it is really trying to do. Or perhaps knowing who she/he/it is would throw us off and lead us to the wrong path.

> The real Akemi Homura would have understood. She would have known that it was hopeless.

Somehow, a timestopping and timeline-hopping MG would have given up her quest to save Madoka because it was somehow impossible.

But as we know from an obscure shooter from the 90s, a cybernetic security officer being guided by numerous psychotic AIs and ancient figures was able to contain and destroy the W'rkncacnter (an eldritch horror of Orz/Giygas/Cthulu-esque proportions) by hopping across an innumerable number of timelines until he was able to find a timeline in which it was possible to do so.

However, the shield is borked to hell and back. It can barely stop time, and may not be able to hop timelines anymore. Perhaps Homura would have despaired at this, knowing that Faust came into being and that she would not be able to hop into another timeline to save her.

> Let this be the last time you try to do the impossible.

We have to make this attempt count. We have no more mulligans.

> Let this be the end. You cannot save her. You cannot save anyone.

Again, this is our final shot. For whatever reason, Chiaki Matsuda or Murderface can't (directly) save Faust or anyone by direct intervention. But perhaps we can help them save themselves, or find someone who can.

The reply to your question is a shorter, terser one. A reply that seemed more petulant than anything, two words that signified that this little conversation, by all accounts, is over and done with.

>A fool.

Immediately afterwards, a notification at the top of your screen notifies you that one entry from your little bastard of a diary app is now ready for unlocking.

You stare silently at those two words glaring back at you from the screen, and it's then that you reach up with your free hand to pinch the bridge of your nose.

It's not enough that you have to deal with all sorts of things, is it? Why can't things be simple, for once?

You save the number this anonymous party is sending their messages from, and register it in your contact list under a puerile insult of a name.

A few taps, and you're at your diary screen, now. The same annoying prompt asking for a five-letter password.

What do you enter?

Alright. Its time to get some answers out of Pinky if you ask me.

After all, she likes playing games, right? Well, we might have a game for her. She said that if we finish her Fetchquest we might summon her or find out who or what we are.
Confron her about that, say that we gathered 3 Items of her Golden Buttfuck-Collection and because of that, we should at least have the right to get 3 Questions answered truthfully by her, if she really expects the rest of her toys.

Because FUCK HER and FUCK OUR DIARY and of all things, FUCK THE FUCKING FAGGOT CAT, too. God, those Messages made me angry. If those were really left by Malal, then god help her, because we WILL find a way to fuel our time-traveling device with the energy of our raw anger and punch her in the fucking face.

You glance quietly at the prompt, the cursor blinking at you in anticipation. With the only sound being that of Midori's deep, regular breathing, you carefully tap out the password. If the exchange earlier a long-winded hint, well, it certainly couldn't have been more blatant than that.

P E N I _

A F O O L

Certainly not like any of the passwords you've entered so far, but it's worth a shot. If it fails, well, them's the breaks.

[PASSWORD ACCEPTED.]

[UNLOCKING ENTRY #9.]

That actually worked. And the entry it unlocks is by far the longest one, so far, but it seems more of a shoddy cut-and-paste job than anything else. It seems to have been done in a hurry.

[--will indeed verify my suspicions that the Ninth Incubator is in fact hiding something in Kamchatka, Siberia, one that he had to bury an entire mile deep underground and build a heavily-fortified base on top of. Whatever it is, it is huge, it is massive, and it is unstable. What locals are left in a two-mile radius of the facility have reported dreaming of a large, monstrous form, seemingly upside down, cackling an unnatural giggle that went on and on. You lean back against the bed's headboard as you let the smartphone drop onto your lap, the unlit cigarette sitting forlornly between your lips.

Well, it sort of made sense. A bit. If Kyuubey's got something to hide, Siberia is the best place to hide it in, isn't it? And you're not so stupid as to miss the tons upon tons of serious hardware guarding the place. It's even got Kharn, so it's completely feasible that whatever's being hidden here, it needs protection.

But protection from what? What's it being protected from?

Or is it the other way around? That instead of keeping everyone else out, the scads of security and weaponry were in fact for keeping whatever it was Kyuubey was hiding inside?

You'd ask, of course, but you just know that the little smug bastard would say something about it being above your pay grade.

Beside you, Midori fidgets slightly.

His plan could have gone off fine and still have been fixed if Homura was not a fuck up. It still turned out fine through sheer dumb luck. And you should not throw random capitals into your sentences, it looks stupid as shit. Going to give you the benefit of the doubt and assume it is for emphasis and not some TVTropes thing.

a) Either we take our Infiltrator, namely, Midori, give her a quick rundown of things and try to infiltrate the place with her in some Mission impossible kind of schtick.

b) we activate our shield and have a serious talk with Pinky. I would prefer to do that with Midori, too, though because she is a clever and observant girl and might give notice someting while ae are talking to Pinky that we didn`t.

You decide to investigate. Of course you're not going to snoop around like a tourist - that'd just be in poor taste. Kharn certainly wouldn't appreciate you poking around. A walk around, nothing more, nothing less. If anyone catches you, your covery story is that you've lost your way trying to find the bathroom. Ignoring the fact that every room in the living quarters has their own.

Yes. That would certainly work.

You carefully slip out from underneath the covers and lever yourself off of the warm, inviting mattress - and for the briefest moment, you shudder at the cold air, now that you've no subordinate to leech body warmth off of. You find yourself glancing somewhat longingly at the empty space beside Midori, and it's only after a few moments that you catch yourself doing it before finally turning away.

You transform again, in midstep, your costume snapping into existence around you, your right arm weighed down once more by your scarred Shield. For some strange reason, it's still clicking, just like how you left it earlier. Funny, that.

A glance towards Midori shows you that she's still asleep, oblivious to the world. You take advantage of this quickly enough, and it's only after a few moments that you find yourself outside your room, the door closed behind you.

It's quiet, here. Except for what seems to be a heated argument going on behind the door to Souji's and Kharn's room.

Where do you go?

[]The elevator. The diary mentioned something being hidden a mile underground. Maybe going to the lowest level will reveal something.

Well Walpurgis Night is a gathering place for witches. I guess that witches actually migrate over to where Walpurgis Night over several years. Then the witches then somehow fuse together into that thing (perhaps they pile on top of eachother).

Something tells me that if no one defeats Walpurgisnacht she just breaks down into her component witches.

Anyway, to make things confusing, Walpurgisnacht is not the witches name.

The diary app also mentioned that "When the traitor's hand strikes, she strikes with the force of the Walpurgisnacht."

Kharn also hinted that the month-long operation would change Chiaki in a big way.

Like one other dude said, I'm starting to think that the second operation is looking to involve integrating part of the Walpurgisnacht into Chiaki's being. Although Kharn may be less susceptible to its effects thanks to her being a reversed witch (or an entirely new being altogether), I'm not sure if it will really help Chiaki. It may even conceivably make her more unstable.

You make a beeline for the elevatus--er, elevator. As tempting as it is to eavesdrop on Kharn - not that something like that is a hobby of yours, you're not some sort of creepy voyeur or anything of the sort - you feel that it'd be overstepping your boundaries with your former partner, putting too much stock in her cheerful affableness towards you and your disgusting ability to forget things. Besides, they're probably talking in Russian, anyway. You wouldn't be able to understand a thing.

The Shield on your right arm is still clicking incessantly as you step into the empty elevator, your heels making quite the racket on the steel grating. You take out the ID card that Kharn had passed you - it's pretty much a clone of your Officio Assassinorum card, but probably coded so as to provide you access to the elevator and such.

You slide the card into the vertical slot that you've seen Kharn and Souji use theirs on. Immediately, the panel beside it slides open, revealing a set of buttons. There are...quite a few, but only three are currently lit. One of them is marked 'G' - which, if your memory serves, is the button that would lead you up to the surface. So that's right out, and leaves the other two.

Which one will you press?

We need to have a good excuse ready when/if we are caught. I'm guessing the guards here aren't foolish enough to be intimidated into silence by a Warmaster-in-training, not when something this important is being guarded.

Something about basements and pantries and needing alcohol and hearing Kharn being pre-occupied in the other room might do.

You reach over and press the backlit button marked B10. The doors creak slightly and hiss as they slowly slide shut in front of you, and the lights inside the elevator flicker a bit as it gives a slight lurch before you feel it start to descend.

It's only halfway through the journey - or at least, you feel that it's halfway, for some strange reason there's no actual readout or display that shows you just what floors you've been passing - that your Shield suddenly ratches up its clicking, both in volume and intensity. Like some sort of rapidly-clicking metronome, going faster and faster. You're pretty sure that if you don't do something fast, well--something may happen that could break the damn thing permanently, that's what it sounds like.

Shaking your head, you grasp the rim of your Shield. If this is Pinky's way of trying to grab your attention, well, it's working.

At least she wouldn't be able to harm anyone else if she were to run amok, here in the elevator. Sure, you're fucked six ways to Sunday if she does, but at least no one else would be.

A rasping of gears, a harsh metallic click, and the world freezes around you in a dull steel-cast gray.

And it's then that you hear it.

Crying.

Laughing.

Sobbing.

Giggling.

Two voices at once, behind you. The smell of blood mixed with perfume filling your nostrils like a stench.

The lights of the elevator flickering, uncertain in their slowness.

It's with a cold sweat that you realize that this...whoever it is in the elevator with you now - it's not Pinky at all. No cheerful pixie with the disturbing eyes and wide smile. Something she'd always been, but you'd never took the time to look properly.

Faust.

Sometimes you have to lie to people. Tell them sweet nothings. Coddle them. Calm them down and curry favor. We are Faust's number one girl and we have fucked things up in some way we don't understand. We need to supplicate her so she doesn't rip our goddamned face off.

On a meta level, all signs point to this being a Madoka Kaname that Akemi Homura (who we may or may not be) fucked up in saving, killed and was killed by, and is Godoka times negative one.

This isn't "apologizing about everything" this is "apologizing for inadvertently causing great pain to someone who really cares about us and can rip us in half like a piece of paper" Also someone who this "Homura-chan" person she keeps calling us fucked her over hardcore. We bear her sins, even if we are not her. If we actually are Homu, we have a shitton to be sorry about, even if we can't remember all of it.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/22/12(Mon)13:01 No.21238483

You are a Magical Girl, and you're wondering if you should have stayed in bed tonight.

You were pretty comfortable, after all. Snuggled up and warm against your naked, albeit injured subordinate of a Callidus. There are worse ways to spend your last night before your procedure, which Kharn, your former partner in crime, had played up to be something of a life-changing experience.

There are definitely worse ways to spend the potentially last few hours of your life.

Being trapped in an elevator with a crazed, malevolent cosmic horror, you think, is one of them.

One who is crying, laughing, giggling and sobbing - all at the same time, her voice fractured into multiple tongues. The sweet, cloying scent of corruption that once tinged the air with her presence now overpowering, a thick choking miasma of ripe carrion. Even without turning around, you know that she is not bearing her usual cheerful, madly-happy facade - another mask, maybe, or perhaps her true face all long.

Dimly you could feel your heart pounding. Much too quickly for it to be just mere adrenalin, much too painfully for it to be just mere fear.

A shadow of a thought passes briefly across your mind - one that tells you that you should probably be alarmed at how much it hurts how to even breathe.

That you should probably be concerned at how each palpable heartbeat is roaring in your ears, making your very vision tremble like the disturbed surface of a placid lake.

It tells you that you should probably be scared about how your mouth seems to be filled with your own blood, the sour tang of it stinging your tongue.

Another thing you should probably be worrying about is how...well, how your Shield somehow isn't working as it should.

You've stopped time, that much you're sure of. You know how it works. All the color in the world suddenly melts away, replaced by a dull cast-iron gray. Everything, as it is, should be frozen in place.

Why, then, does it feel like the elevator is still moving? Add to that, why is the floor number display flashing erratically, counting down, then counting up again?

"Homura-chan, look at me." Pinky says, the strange name twisted into a feral growl, as if she was snarling through sharpened teeth - her warm breath tickling the back of your neck. "Turn around. Tell me how much you hate me. Tell me how little you care for me. " It's then that she roars, anger, hate and sadness turning her words into little less than a beast's rabid howling, the elevator trembling at her rage.

"TURN AROUND AND LOOK AT ME! TELL ME HOW YOU'VE FORGOTTEN EVERYTHING EVEN THOUGH YOU PROMISED NOT TO!"

What do you do?

Things are pretty jacked up right now, but I think this could be a good opportunity to get some information from Faustdoka and possibly improve our standing. She's hella pissed right now, but we may be as much as a victim in this as she is.

She keeps screaming at us, but she's the one forcing corruptive items on us that threaten to drive Chiaki insane and kill everything that she holds dear, all the while saying that all of this was done for her sake. Well, caring is a two-way street; you can't just inflict all of these destructive items (and the dangerous situations that go along with it) on a person and expect them to thank/love/trust you for it. Claiming to do this to make said person better for it or because you love/care for them only makes it infinitely worse. If Madoka genuinely cares and wants to to help out Homura/Chiaki and WANTS Homura/Chiaki to reciprocate her feelings, she's either going to have to contribute a sincere act of contrition or give her some sincere aid. Otherwise she's just making rationalizations for her bastardly behavior.

Like Zoom and the Flash. Zoom did all this crazy batshit heart-rending stuff to the Flash in some crazed attempt to make him a better hero, but the Flash sure didn't appreciate it. And Zoom came out of it looking like a right bastard for it.

You turn around, and come face-to-face with your death moments before she takes you.

It only takes one single hearbeat for a delicately-gloved hand, fingers sheathed in delicate silk, to spear right into your chest.

You dimly something creak and strain somewhere inside your chest for a brief moment before snapping loudly, crunchily, and it's with stark amusement that you realize that she'd actually punched right through your ribcage, the protective breastplate smashed through with contemptuous ease. An involuntary cough, a brief spasm of your lungs, and you feel blood stringing down the corners of your lips, trickling down your chin.

You close your eyes as you feel fingers - claws - curl around your heart.

Strange, really. It hurts less than you remember. It doesn't hurt at all.

You open your eyes again - your vision dimming slightly - and you blink again as you see Pinky as you've never seen her before.

In a beautiful white dress, splattered gruesomely with your own blood. Her eyes no longer the familiar, almost comforting black - now a warm amber, if tinged with a tearful sadness that you know has no place there. Her lower lip trembling, flinching as another cough sends a spray of crimson onto her dress again, some of the misted droplets staining her own face.

"I-I'm sorry, Homura-chan," Pinky murmurs, her voice pure, clean, without malice or anger - only regret. "I can't be brought back. You have to accept that. I can't let you destroy everything." She chokes back a sob, hiccuping instead. "P-please forgive me. I didn't want to do this."

You are barely able to mouth your surprise and confusion at this before she tears your heart right out from your chest. A fleshy ripping sound echoing in your ears as flesh and viscera rip away in the same movement.

The last thought that burns in your mind as you feel yourself crumple to the floor would have made you laugh - if you had any air left in your tortured lungs, at least.

Man, having amnesia is really dildos.

You open your eyes after what seems to be an interminable amount of time, and immediately shut them again. The glare of an overhead lamp - or a series of lamps - aimed directly at your face forcing you to do so.

"Ah!" A familiar voice, hushed yet tingling with amusement, exclaims from somewhere above you. "Murderface graces us with her consciousness. I was beginning to think we would not be needing anesthesia."

Anesthesia...? But you were at the elevator. That you can remember. Clear as day. The message, the diary entry, Pinky coming around -- everything. You even transformed and went out to investigate. What's going on?

You creak one eye open, slowly. The lamp overhead seems to be obscured by a dark shape - one that resolves into the smiling face of Valnikov Kharn, looking down at you. You blink slightly at the strange orientation, before you realize that you're lying down, flat on your back - and your arms and legs secured to whatever it was you're lying on, in gold-plated manacles. Disturbingly, three miniguns are jutting down and out of the ceiling, the mouths of their clustered barrels aimed directly at you.

"There, there, comrade. Don't struggle too much." Your former partner's dulcet tones are comforting. "Your bonds, they are not too tight, yes? I calibrated them personally." She glances to the side, and you try to follow her line of sight - when you realize that you cannot even turn your head, clamps at either side of your face keeping you facing forward. "Ah, Souji, please be making sure this is a private procedure, please? We do not want Misaka or Midori stumbling into the chamber. This is very delicate."

A grumble of assent, and Kharn returns once more to your limited field of vision. "Ah, there we go. You know, you scared us, earlier. We found you unconscious in the elevator. Where were you planning on going? Or are you sleepwalking now, Murderface?"

How do you react?

[]Ask about how you were found.

After a point, there simply isn't enough magic left, and unless a Grief Seed is used, the Gem cracks.

That's why the military encourages .50 HEAPI to combat Magical Girls. Even if a direct shot at the Gem is impossible, a shot with these guarantees incapacitation, and successive shots death.

"Hnh?" Kharn blinks down at you as she picks up a clipboard from somewhere beside you and scribbles something down on it, her brutally-clawed hands holding a pencil with her usual delicate grip. "How we found you? Ah, is easy. Souji and I were up late last night, comparing notes and doing science things..." A faint redness creeps up on her cheeks as she seems to avert her gaze from your eyes, before turning back to face you. "...and then we hear something banging around the elevator. Souji went to investigate, and found you sprawled on the elevator floor."

She shrugs. "I thought you were just drunk from all drinking earlier, but you did not seem like such. So maybe sleepwalking, eh? In any case, we were very awake by then, so we decide to just do procedure now, before Midori or Misaka wakes up." Kharn smiles. "I am envious, but those two are very concerned about you, Murderface. Better for this nastiness to be over by the time they come back from dreamland, so that they do not have to see their Murderface suffer."

At your question about the miniguns, it's then that she laughs. "Ah, such a baby, Murderface! Do not be like baby, complaining about everything." Kharn reaches over and pinches your cheek playfully. "Is for precaution, in case Murderface turns into a Witch during procedure. Of course, there are low chances of it happening, but in our line of work, we, ah, cannot afford to take too many risks, eh?"

Cute. real cute.

You briefly try to struggle against the manacles, but they're clinched shut. Kharn does know her stuff.

How do you respond?

However, I was thinking about Sayaka turning into Oktavia von Seckendorff and I realised that some of the themes that Oktavia represents, music and unrequited love, don't seem to apply to MGNQ Sayaka.

MGNQ Oktavia von Seckendorff could be very different to anime Oktavia von Seckendorff.

Kharn laughs, before playfully rapping her fleshmetal knuckles against your skull in an admonishing gesture. "Now, now, I will not have your usual good cheer and optimism curse this procedure into failure." She shakes her head, smiling. "Relax, comrade! You are being treated by the best Kyuubey has to offer. Souji is useless, boorish, immature and does not pick up after himself, but he is not the head of Research and Development for nothing." Your former partner ignores the grumbling from behind her. "If there is anyone who is capable of doing this procedure right, it is him and him alone."

Well. At least she's confident about your chances. Souji's attitude doesn't exactly inspire that, but if it's Kharn vouching for him, then that's good enough for you.

You then ask her about...well, the procedure itself. This question she seems a bit hesitant to answer - and she usually doesn't hesitate with anything, which makes this one particularly stark in its sudden presentation.

"Hnh. Well, unofficially, I suppose I can say..." Kharn murmurs underneath her breath, reaching out to brush a few strands of hair away from your eyes with her clawtips, a curiously gentle gesture. "...it is simple process. We implant something in your soul gem to form a circuit. Naturally, this is delicate, you see?" She reaches behind her to draw out her own Soul Gem, a crimson jewel encased in a brutishly-spiked silver gilding affair so tarnished it might as well be black.

"Outside modifications to the soul gem can compromise it, no matter how small." She gives you a second to glance at her soul gem, before putting it away. "Anyway, closed circuit is so that the corruption is not completely absorbed by your Soul Gem, rather it is...shifted to something else, something that can absorb enormous amounts of corruption and still remain intact." A small, sad smile.

"You can say this something feeds upon it. It relishes corruption."

Well. You don't know any specifics, but...you can probably guess, can't you?

"I cannot say anything else beyond that. It is classified." Kharn shakes her head. "I am very sorry, comrade. I suppose you will have to make Warmaster really quickly, after this, so that you will know." Her trademark smile comes to the fore yet again.

As classified as her relationship with Souji, then? You manage a smirk at her stunned expression. You weren't born yesterday. Was SCIENCE what they called it nowadays? What happened to her fetish with blondes? Why HIM?

". . . T-there you go again, speaking nonsense," Kharn murmurs underneath her breath, her cheeks positively crimson. "N-no, no, you misunderstand. Platonic! It is a platonic working relationship! We are colleagues!"

Right. Sure. You at least hope that he's treating your former partner right.

"Murderface, I..." Kharn looks down at you, as if trying to decide how to properly say something, but stops herself in time. "...Never mind. It is nothing." She shakes her head. A forced smile curling her lips now. "Is there anything you wish for me to pass on to Midori before we begin the procedure? I am reminding you of the possibility of your one-month nap."

What do you say?

I guess that Kharn and Souji at least suspect our pinky connection. Somehow heard banging roughly 10 floors up that didn't wake anybody else?

I doubt it, perhaps they were alerted because of a huge concentration of magic building up in the location.
They are not just going to do the procedure on us. They are going to prod at us and there isn't a thing that we can do about it.

Kharn nods. "Yes, we have been made aware of that." A glance off to the side, again, probably to Souji, before she turns back to you. "We have agreed that despite your attunement with her, the chances of the procedure affecting her is very low." A small frown curls her lips. "Well, if I will be honest, there is a chance the procedure may form the circuit with her soul gem as part of it, but it is negligible at best. Is nothing to be worried about."

She then blinks at you, her own sunless, crimson-pinned eyes widening. "How...how did you know? I..." A moment of silence, and it's then that Kharn clicks her tongue. "No, no, will have to ask later. We have a schedule to keep. Schedule." She gestures at the miniguns bristling overhead, and their clustered barrels spin slightly in response.

"I...I am well aware that this sounds dangerous, Murderface, but it is only way. I do not like it as much as you do, but..." Another off-view glance, before Kharn's voice lowers to a whisper. "I have already lost Malal, Murderface. I have already lost you, once. I cannot lose you again."

Gently, she traces a line on your cheek with the tip of her index claw. The gesture once more showing just how gentle your former partner could be with her brutish hand-spikes. "You are one of the Blessed Lady's Chosen. I cannot change that, obviously. But if I can delay the inevitable, it is...much more preferable than having to kill you here, right now."

You nod slowly at this, slightly unnerved, but at the very least understanding where Kharn's coming from. You let out a small sigh, before working up a smile - more to Kharn's benefit than yourself - and you tell her what to say to Midori. And Misaka, as well. Her face brightening up as you do so.

"Consider it done, Murderface." It's then that you feel a skeletal fleshmetal hand slip between your fingers, clasping your hand, and you blink up at Kharn. "And I will ensure that they are safe within these walls, no matter what happens. And no matter how much you scream or bleed, I will tell them that their big sister Murderface is doing very well in recovery."

You thank Kharn. At the very least, you won't feel too guilty about being forced to take a month-long nap. You give her hand a squeeze, and she returns it before relinquishing her grip.

"We will administer anasthesia shortly, Murderface. I have prepared a medicine cocktail for you, already, so this will feel very familiar." Kharn grins just as you feel the slightest bit of vertigo, along with a cool, calming numbness spreading from your skin and seeping underneath. "Now, Souji, let us make sure our new Warmaster returns to us in one piece, yes?"

Your vision starts to grow dim as you slowly feel yourself...relaxing. Caring less and less for what might happen while you're under. In rare instances such as these, you should probably just enjoy it, right?

It's with a sigh that you close your eyes.

Maybe, with luck, you won't wake up.

Your consciousness fades just as you hear a familiar laughing behind you.

CONSPIRACY FINTOIL HAT TIME: TOO LATE EDITION

Madoka didn't become the god-witch Faust, initially. Maybe Madoka ascended into godhood, but Homura still wanted her back. Thus, she tried to "save" her by doing something extremely dangerous to the fabric of reality. Madoka shows up to stop her, and is forced to stop her.

But Homura goes full yandere, and does something to drive Madoka into becoming a witch. And also kills her in the process.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/25/12(Thu)13:00 No.21285241

Approximately one year and eleven months ago, you were an Incubator.

The Ninth Incubator.

The Ninth out of twenty, one of the chosen few. Sent from home, plucked from a comfortable and easy existence to serve. To protect. To see that the Universe, as it was, remained intact for as long as it possibly could. Using the abilities provided to you to create contracts.

A noble endeavor. Inherently altruistic.

Completely devoid of any ulterior motive.

>>21285241

The Ninth out of Twenty, and you prided yourself to be the best among them - the most efficient, the most productive, the most competent of all your brothers. Of course, that's not just the typical arrogance seemingly bred in every Incubator speaking - most of them, even the unfortunate few who have strayed, had admitted as much. They agreed that yes, the Ninth was the one most suited, the most compatible to this onerous task.

You're still not sure if they meant their assesments to be taken as a compliment or as an insult. Then again, you never really cared enough to ask. Their recognition of your superiority was enough.

That would be the challenging part, but you're not too much in a rush about it.

You have a lot of time. Quite a lot of it, in fact.

When your superiors used descriptors such as 'half an eternity', it doesn't really help to impress upon you the urgency of the matter, does it?

You are currently in your personal office. The screen array in front of you is displaying many data feeds at once - a simple tap on the keyboard makes one of them display the time in numerical format, down to the milliseconds ticking away.

9 AM. Morning. Breakfast time.

You blink at the screen again, before involuntarily yawning - the realization that you've once again worked through the night accompanied by the slight pang of hunger scratching against your stomach.

Hunger. It's a decidedly strange sensation, you note. Back home, hunger never really was an issue. Your species was not one that needed sustenance. It was an optional thing to indulge in, easily so that it could even be considered something of a vice, really.

This assignment, of course, had given you more than enough chances to partake in it, and you had succumbed to the temptation more than you can count. This minute growling worried you slightly - a symptom of withdrawal, obviously, and one you would need to take care of unless you wanted to be distracted the entire day. And you didn't. You can't afford to be, not on a busy day like this. Not when you have an entire Officio to manage, and contracts to make.

What do you do to start off the day?

[]Call Mami Tomoe in and ask for breakfast.
[]Call Mami Tomoe in and ask for a thirty-minute relaxation procedure.

You choose to attend to this bothersome problem by calling in one of your contractees to bring you breakfast. And not just any mere contractee - this was one of your most promising and most successful of prospects, respected by all the other personnel in your own Officio, moreso than the Warmaster you yourself had appointed. Exemplar in all aspects of being a Magical Girl. A contract that most Incubators could only fantasize about making.

Glancing down on the keyboard by your feet, you reach over and press the appropriate keys. There's a whirr as the multi-screen array in front of you rearranges themselves into a large, seamless, vertically-rectangular slate - and the words SOUND ONLY manifest in the middle of the newly-formed monolith, in stark crimson lettering.

"Hello? Ah, good morning, Kyuubey-san." The contractee in question greets you, and you note with a faint hint of amusement that she still insists on appending the honorific to your name, even after you've told her time and again that it was not necessary at the slightest. "To what do I owe the pleasure of this call?"

You give her your answer, and the smile is obvious in her voice. "Of course. The usual for you, Kyuubey-san. Give me a few moments, and I'll be right up with your breakfast."

The connection is severed, and the screens rearrange themselves once more to display the feeds from earlier. Scrolling information that range from the mundane to the noteworthy.

Mami Tomoe. A blonde-haired young woman, with soft amber eyes, an aesthetically-pleasing form, and an air of quiet elegance in everything that she does. Despite her contract being made out of desperation, she had accepted and acclimatized to the onerous task of being a Magical Girl with an eagerness that rarely, if ever, manifests in fresh recruits with circumstances similar to hers.
Instead of being alarmed or regretful about the choice she'd made, she'd actually attacked the role with vigor - and her rise in the ranks as well as in your favor was nothing short of meteoric. It's no secret that you hold her in high esteem, consider her rather important to the Officio's well-being.

You were certainly...concerned when she got herself trapped in the Witch Charlotte's Nightmare. In fact, you would have probably led the rescue attempt instead of Kirika, had not the Eversor stubbornly volunteered for it.

And you were surprised to discover the reason of her plight - that being a strange Magical Girl that you have never seen before. You consulted your fellow Incubators about her, but none of them admitted to establishing her contract, nor even spotting her as a potential candidate.

An irregular in every sense of the word. She should not exist - she should not even have the scarred Shield clamped on her right arm, or the stable form of a Soul Gem affixed to the back of her hand.

And yet, there she was. After spending two weeks in the Silent Room, being interrogated by two of your top Eversors, Mami had taken it upon herself to nurse the Irregular back to health, to see what she had to say without it on pain of being skewered by elegantly-wrought swords, or impaled on a brutal trident spear.

Another oddity was that the girl had no memory of anything at all. Nothing from the long term. She didn't know who she was or where she was from - any questions trying to discover that was met with unblinking, unflinching silence. It was as if her mind had been reaved completely clean of memories, a blank slate. Not even a name.

You make a note to ask Mami Tomoe about the girl she rescued. Nothing too prying, of course - just an update on what's happened so far.

While you're not exactly superstitious, something tells you this Irregular is not at all what she intends to present herself as.

You are wondering idly if this could be cause for alarm. Incubators are not supposed to be superstitious, or believe in abstract concepts such as fortune and good luck. Doing so would simply be...well, your brothers would certainly call it something that would not translate very well to the common vernacular. They might also call you some words that are not fit for any tier of high society, or even the lowest cesspit.

IT's only after a few moments more of such rumination that Mami Tomoe steps through the doors of your office, in her freshly-transformed costume. The dark brown beret placed almost jauntily on top of her warm, soft hair, accentuating the loose drills that had been teased into meticulous shape.

A smile on her face and a tray bearing a plate of pancakes - divine-smelling creations of flour, maple syrup, milk and eggs - in her hands.

"Will that be all, Kyuubey-san?" Mami Tomoe says after placing the tray on your desk's surface. Her hands clasped behind her, ever the patient, beatific saint.

[]Thank her for the breakfast and dismiss her. You've work to do.

It was pretty good, they streamlined the plot without really taking anything out, answered a question or two, and generally touched up the animation, voicing, and music. There were a couple odd choices around the moemura flashback since they couldn't just drop you in like the show did.

It wasn't, like, a completely new experience though, in the end it was just the same story, a little prettier, in 4 hours instead of 5.5.

Thinking about Faust, I wanted to some write something about Faust cuddling a delirious Chiaki while blaming Godoka for all the pain 'poor Homura-chan' went though but I couldn't really get the story started.

Well there is part of the conversation I came up with, perhaps it will inspire another writer.

Faust: “To her [Godoka], you’re just her best friend in an ocean of best friends. I however I love you for what you tried to do, I understand what you went through.”

Godoka: “I never… never thought that Homura-chan would grow to hate the new world.”

Faust: “That’s because thought too much for ‘other people’. You abandoned poor Homura-chan with only a few useless hair ribbons and words of friendship. She deserved much more than that.... Thinking about it, you were so evil back then. Did you enjoy standing over her broken body, ignoring her warnings and then with a smile crushing and shattering all her hopes and dreams. All for the sake of making ‘other people’ happy.”

Faust: "The only person who mattered wasn't happy"

well, we will be having a long nap with an angry Faust on our back, it is possible that hostile magical girls will assault the facility to get Mirai back/kill Midori/steal Kyuubey's secrets, or they make an attack on our officio as retribution which is unlikely but still possible.

It is also entirely impossible that when we wake up it will be just like or very similar to that nightmare we had where we kill everyone and everything

I hope we can smooth things over with Faust, spending an estimated month getting tortured/killed repeatedly in a dream can't be healthy.

I feel that Midori, as a character, is emotionally attached to our player character in a manner which is both more irrational than that typically attributable to such, and unhealthy for reasons beyond the fact that everyone we're around suffers. As such, I believe that it would be an interesting character development if we were to act to promote introspection in her with the ultimate goal of revealing the underlying motivations behind her actions to both her and us, as I suspect that she may have given them insufficient thought.

Also, I hate you.

Arguing that we should all shut up and jump on the train is why you are grimderp. This isn't about meta knowledge.

Kyuubey: "It's strange, isn't it, Matsuda? How this particular rock in space looks. What you're looking at isn't a planet or an asteroid - it's actually a grief seed. We found it hiding in the shadow of this planet's moon. It's invisible to everything else - NASA has yet to even discover it - but we have enough technology with us to actually see what it is."

"We believe it belongs to a Witch unlike any other. A Witch who retains her presence of mind, thought, and has untold amounts of power - to the point that we believe that she is more of a concept than an actual being. Not something you can easily kill, at that."

""We call this Witch Faust"

If something could be done about Faust's grief seed, her soul gem, Kyuubey would have done so already.

You cannot shoot bullets at Gravity to make it stop working. You cannot shoot bullets at Faust to make her die. This is what a concept means, this is why killing her is a stupid idea.

The logical path is to take what we already know about Faust, that she's more a concept than a witch, and she's way too yandere, and act on it. This means getting on her good side, so she won't pull our heart out for a third time, and then convincing her to unwitch herself. Kharn did it, she can too. At the very least, getting on her good side should get her to settle down a bit about the constant death threats to anyone in her vicinity.

The way I see it, Faustdoka can't really be stopped by conventional means. We're either going to have to diplomance her to either move on to wherever (probably nearly impossible, and we don't really know IF there's anywhere for godlike beings to move on to), or possibly erase/end this timeline. The shield-possessed Misaka told Chiaki that she had to end this world before Faust did. The most common way to interpret this is to either trap Faustdoka in a dead universe that will serve as her eternally silent prison, or do dangerous things to the timeline to ensure that Faustdoka will never come about.

There's probably more options that don't involve destroying this world as we know it. But we'll need to know more about Faustdoka's plans to do anything about it. She did mention that she was doing "all of this" for Homura's sake; perhaps Madoka is doing all of this to save Homura?

If you'll recall from the original series, Homura's tampering with the timeline is the ENTIRE REASON why Madoka was so powerful in the first place.

If we are indeed Homura, and Pinky / Faust is indeed a corrupted Godoka, we can theoretically pull the same kind of time shenanigans to deal with her. Not to mention, if we can fix our shield, we can just go back to the beginning and nip the problem in the bud.

It also kind of mindblowing how you people manage to complain about grimderp and that killing Pinky would be badd, grr, but at the same time you seem completly unconcerned about the high bodycount of victims when it comes to megucas and humans. How exactly is disregarding all the lives that were lost through her machinations and letting her go unpunished NOT grimdark?
On that note: How was the chinesee cartton not grimdark as fuck and despite a somewhat positive ending still managed to stay pretty ambivalent if getting rid of witches was a smart move.

if you guys claim to have an opinion and standby it you really should review that opinion because right now, it doesn`t hold together, especially the "Noo, grimderps are baaaaad"-part.

We still don't know how the ritual works, or how these fuckers keep learning about it, only that it has something to do with Pinky. Considering that both times we've seen it, Pinky directly lent aid to someone trying to stop it, it's worth holding back on putting those on her neck until we know more.

Even if we give Pinky credit for all of those deaths, Murderface has killed a comparable number of people without being corrupted, and every single one of them was intentional and personal.

And past that, the gold weapons are obviously bad fucking news. Mami threw hers away rather than save herself with it without even knowing what it was. Anyone who uses one is either already a psychopath like Kirika, a fool who should know better, or a desperate fool.

She accomplished something. If it were grimdark, she would only have delayed the inevitable. If it were grimdark, she would have tried and failed. Managing to accomplish a lasting improvement that doesn't blow up in your face is fundamentally not grimdark.

Well, taking what we know in character:
1) We are a broken miserable wreck
2) We cause pain and suffering to those around us
3) We're probably going insane

Knowing this, we can go several ways. They range on a spectrum of embracing to rejecting who we are.

We can take who we are and embrace that, becoming more of a sociopathic murderer. Destroying everyone around us and possibly ourselves in the end.

We can fully reject what we are becoming, and attempt to fight back against the inevitable. Fighting against what might as well be fate itself.

And in between, we have the multitude of choices on the spectrum. Personally, I would like to see personal acceptance, and perhaps a path towards redemption. We recognize what we are, and then accept that. But we do not like it or embrace it. We do our best to try and improve our life, and the lives of others. We yield to fate, but attempt to nudge it into a slightly better course rather than stop it.

Perhaps yield was the wrong word. I simply meant to show the difference between this option and either embracing or rejecting the path we are currently on.

Perhaps a better analogy is in order. Fate is like a river. It is a force of nature, it dwarfs us completely in scale. The options I laid out earlier could then be laid out in this analogy, the extremes being either swimming with the river, getting to the end of our path quicker, or attempting to swim against it, only delaying the inevitable.

But those need not be our only choices. Instead, why don't we swim to the side. We work within the confines of fate to establish a better end. Neither submitting nor rejecting. We simply need to understand our own position and work from there.

[redacted]

Rivers change course over time. By the forces of human intervention canals can be dug, locks built, dams constructed, rivers dredged deeper or filled to be shallower. These techniques work because they do not stop the river, they merely suggest a new direction, and then make that new direction the path of least resistance. To change our fate, we do not need to become a saint, we only need to become good enough to avert disaster.

Putting Mami ourtight in the basment seems like a bad idea. We should at least try to be diplomatic about that.

First, we will stalk her for some time, check out who she meets up, what she does in her free time. You know.. Intel-Gathering so we know all that things about her that she tries to keep a lid on.
Secondly, any romantic liasons held by her will be dealt with swiftly by making them vanish and [redacted]
Thirdly, we will make our advances on her. Flowers here, some gifts there, should she, for whatever reason, pretend not to reciprocate to our feelings we will obviously show her that there is nothing to be ashamed off, after all, we love her just as much as she loves us. Maybe a tinybitsy bit more. And we know that she loves us. Because there is no way she wouldn`t. because we are made for each other, everybody knows that. She may need some time to adapt to her own overflowing feelings for us and act accoording to them, but there is no need to worry, we will make her. We will take our time, be patient , and we will make her love us. because this is how much she means to us, so she has to KNOW.ALL.OF.OUR.FEELINGS.FOR. HER! EVEN IF THIS MEANS TIEING HER UP AND HAVING LONG, LONG SESSION OF TALKS IN THE BASEMENT ABOUT OUR LOVE!

Do you know what love is?
It isn't the palpitations of your heart as you share in a wordless exchange, basking in the glow of fireworks, his eyes locked to yours, yours to his. That's nothing more than a fancy, possibly fleeting, ultimately meaningless. Incomparable to "love." It isn't the nervous happiness that wells up in every fiber of your being as you try to regain your composure, following in the wake of his charmingly clumsy confession as you stare at your feet. Those are children's games; pale imitations, misconceptions of "love" you play at to while away the time. A mere facade of "love." It isn't even the intimacy you share, locked together in an embrace, sharing your warmth, mouth pressed against his as you force him into you, eyes fixed together in a longing stare. There's passion, yes, as you cling to him bestially, trying to sink in your claws, leave your mark, imprint yourself onto him. And yet you only barely begin to see the enormity of "love."
Love is more than a feeling. More than a desire. More than a need. It's a connection. A bond. A chain, encircling everything of yours: your feelings, your desires, your needs, your actions, your story, everything. Everything of yours, and everything of his. It binds it all together, coalesces towards a single harmonious existence that encompasses you, him, and the love you share, and nothing else. Love means not only the willingness, but the ability to give everything to him, for him. For love. It means taking everything beautiful and everything terrible about yourself and allowing it to wither and die, fester and grow. For love. It means surrender. Absolute surrender. Surrendering yourself to him, having him surrender himself, to you. For love.

I love him. Can you say the same?
Well. I guess you can't say much of anything, can you?
Do you know how I can say that you don't love him?
Because.
If you did, why, you'd be the one holding the knife.

It's built on UDK, which I've gotten smooth-skinned meshes/rigs/animation sets into before. Hopefully they haven't tinkered with TOO much stuff to change that.

I kinda doubt it, anyway, Thin Men are pretty obviously smooth skinned. Iunno what the influence limits are, but I tend to work to three anyway, which a modern Triple-A engine for primary platforms (as opposed to portable) should be able to handle with ease.

Grimderp crowd came from people wanting to cut all ties and go full murderdeathkill on everything, it became linked to anyone who anti waifu'd from the fact that originally the people who reacted the strongest to the waifuing were ridiculous about it and had no clue what noir was

Now we have waifu and grimderp not as proper examples of the original argument but any time someone disagrees with someone else about what should be done with waifu being the "let's be nicer to people" side of things and grimderp being the "let's just be honest we are a cunt so let's act like it" side of things

Best example of grimderp:

>apologizing to Kharn for whatever Murderface did to her
>not apologizing to Pinky in the elevator when she's crazy-emotional and playing along with her while she's bawling might make her say more than she intends to and yield more clues as to what she is

Philip Marlowe was god-tier at using the "good cop" routine along with large amounts of alcohol to get information out of people (though I doubt getting Faust drunk to loosen her lips would work).

Instead, we get:

This thread is a clusterfuck of opinions. I'm sure mine will make everything better.

Chiaki would be a lot better off if she had stayed in bed and made all of Midori's wet dreams come true. She could've avoided Pinky, for a bit longer, at least. That heart-wrenching visit probably kicked the corruption up a notch. Which may make Chiaki's current situation worse.

And Midori deserves it, damn it. Poor girl's a wreck.

I've been wondering about Kharn...it's implied that she and Misaka's brother are in a relationship. Yet during the flashback, she was the godempress of lezkind. Is that guy really a girl? Did whatever it was that happened to Malal cause her to swear off women? Can magical girls wish to be male?

I think it is more Kharn was the god empress of sleeping with anything slightly attractive or intriguing (remember the culexuses that Malal said weren't blonde) more than lezkind

And even then she might be bisexual which given Kharn wouldn't be surprising
I still think that whatever happened between what we saw and Kharn retiring to Siberia really did change her and she went from wanting to just screw everything possible to wanting to settle down with a side interest in screwing only people she has wanted for a long time like Mami

Except there was a shitload of people who were against is because it was retarded. Including me.
I also never enjoyed Kharn`s Perspective,especially nor her chucklefuckey BLOOD FOR THE BLOODGOD. She was great as a Side/Mentor-Character but it was an awful move by chuckefucks/waifufags to want to play as her what ruined that character for me.

>not apologizing to Pinky in the elevator when she's crazy-emotional and playing along with her while she's bawling might make her say more than she intends to and yield more clues as to what she is Right. Because that worked so good in the past and she did provide us with SO MANY INFORMATIONS when we asked directly about it, right? Oh wait, except she didnt, we still should suck up to the cunt though..because? Because.. uh.. ehm.. . Oh. There is no reason whatsoever. What a surprise.
And then you still manage to wonder why it looks like you are shipping her. Wow. Just wow.

Fairly standard practice. You can't really charge people for DLC if they can just mod that shit in, so stuff tends to be fairly locked down. They'll probably be dropping modding tools in 120 days or so once the first DLC's been out for a while.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/27/12(Sat)11:18 No.21309791

Approximately one year and eleven months ago, you were the Incubator of the Officio of Japan. You had complete control over a thousand Magical Girls, and thrice that in mundane manpower. Your revenue is through the roof, your output unparalleled, and you have enough available funds to start a war - or fund the construction of an off-shore R&D facility where people don't ask questions much. You are also looking into funding small microentreprenurial ventures in the city - those that have to do with print publications. You've heard how profitable they are.

But one of those things is a misnomer, however. Strictly speaking, your Officio isn't the only one established in Japan - although that's the way it should be, ideally. You were the one selected to leverage this particular piece of territory, after all; a selection, you've been assured, that had been made with your key competencies and scalable expertise in mind.

Such was your surprise, then, when you found out that two of your brothers had set up shop in the same country as you. You immediately confronted them about this slight, sensing some wires being crossed somewhere - and they were sufficiently contrite and apologetic enough that you realized that you didn't seem to mind that much about it.

All of you were still starting out, after all, and the assignment was a long one. There was no need to be greedy or territorial just yet - there would be enough time for them to move away and settle somewhere else when they have developed enough of a presence, made enough contracts. There would be enough prospects for everyone.

You left that meeting with their promises that they would not oppose you. This was reassuring - unlike some of your other kindred that had made clear of their animosity towards you even before the assignment began. Not that you took any of the threats they pulsed your way, of course. Dissenters always had a way of dissenting, and their puerile attempts of intimidation did not need dignifying with a response or even acknowledgement.

"Will there be anything else, Kyuubey-san?"

This question is posed to you by none other than one of your best and brightest contracts, a blonde young woman by the name of Tomoe Mami. She'd just placed a platter full of pancakes on your desk, in front of you, and you could already taste the soft fluffiness of them melting in your mouth, the sweetness of the syrup tickling your tongue.

...Sanbey is right. You've gotten soft. Frail. Complacent. Weak. YOu were never like this, never this eager to partake in such base pleasures.

You let Mami Tomoe wait as you take up the supplied fork and knife with your available appendages and inexpertly cut yourself a piece of the uppermost pancake, the one with the heart-shaped piece of butter contentedly melting in its pool syrup. You place the small morsel in your mouth, chew for a moment, and then swallow.

You remark after a moment, careful to keep your voice neutral as always, that these were in fact passable pancakes. Tomoe smiles at this, taking it as the compliment that it is, and visibly reddens with pleasure. She thanks you with a small curtsey, and you chew on another mouthful as you reach over and tap at your keyboard.

The mysterious Girl A. The Magical Girl that Mami rescued.

"Stay for a moment, Mami Tomoe. I want to ask you about this girl."

The blonde young woman nods, the pleased smile on her lips turning into a polite, if guarded one. "Yes, of course, Kyuubey-san. Whatever you need."

Such dedication. Such loyalty.

What do you ask her about Girl A?

Mami shakes her head at your questions. "My apologies, Kyuubey-san, but so far she's been a bit...well, how can I say this?" She spreads both gloved hands before her in a seemingly apologetic gesture of contrition. "We've tried nearly everything to make her talk, but so far we haven't gotten a word out of the girl." A moment's hesitation, before she continues.

"If I may be so bold as to posit my own opinion in the matter, here, I doubt she has anything to tell us, even if we try our usual methods here, Kyuubey-san. Whenever she looks at me, her eyes just look so...empty. So lonely." A mournful expression briefly flashes across her face. "It's as if someone tore her very soul out and wrung it dry of everything that she was."

You carefully manipulate the metal utensils Mami had so kindly supplied you with your breakfast to deposit another forkful of syrup-soaked pancake into your mouth. Well, in so many words, that's what a contract does - but it never affects a contractee to that extent. Crystallizing someone's soul into a gem the size of a bauble does not, usually, overwrite their personalities or drastically alter their outlook. When it does happen, it's usually a faulty contract, an error in the crystallization process somewhere. That kind of mistake is grievous to one's record. Incubators have been executed - through atmospheric immolation - for much less.

You ask her, then, if Girl A might be any worth to the Officio, in her current. Mami nods before you could even finish your sentence.

"I have no doubt about this, Kyuubey-san." Mami Tomoe steps forward, her voice the clearest you've heard it in months. "Granted, I haven't seen her in action, she's still a bit bedridden - but please believe me when I say that she would make a stellar addition to the payroll. Give me...give me at least a month with her, and I'll get her back into operation readiness. She'll be one of the best, that I can assure you."

Well, this is rather a surprise. Mami Tomoe certainly has a kind word for everyone she meets, but this is far and beyond what you've heard from her. What gives her such confidence in her ward, then, you ask?

It's here that she falters. "I...I can't rightly say, Kyuubey-san. I just know it. I suppose you could call it intuition, but..." She glances down briefly at her feet, as if trying to seek the answers from the polished marble tile of your Office. "I...I believe that I was meant to find her there, in Charlotte's barrier, and rescue her. I believe I was meant to rescue her and bring her here, Kyuubey-san. I can't explain it, but it just feels that way. And I know she'll be a key addition to this Officio, if only you'll let her."

This of course is a conundrum. You've always made it a point to...choose your contracts carefully, as it were. You are all too familiar about what sort of damage an unstable contractee could do, with an Incubator's wish fueling her...more destructive tendencies. You have enough trouble with some of the Eversors already, and they were your own contracts. A mysterious girl with her contract made by an unknown Incubator, well, that's just pushing the envelope, now.

You chew and swallow another mouthful of pancake. By this time, you've eaten through nearly a fourth of your breakfast, and usually you'd already be satisfied. That would have been true, had your breakfast come from its typical source. But this was different, obviously. No Culexus, not even your Warmaster's Aide, could make pancakes as perfect as these. As heavenly as these.

You close your eyes briefly, before opening them again.

Soft. Complacent. Weak.

Someday, you will make your brother regret saying that to your face.

Perhaps a hostile takeover of his Officio's assets and contracts in the near future? Maybe. It has potential, at least.

You polish off the fifth pancake on the pile, before turning back slightly to consider the dour expression on Girl A's mugshot. Now that Mami had mentioned it, Girl A's eyes do look empty, as if she had been hollowed out from inside. Her dark purple eyes, dull and lifeless, stared back at you from your array of monitors, as if coldly considering what to do with you. It's quite the haunted expression, and you turn away to face an expectant Mami Tomoe trying to appear calm.

You give her your decision, and it's one that brings that bright smile back on her face. If she feels so strongly about Girl A and her ability to bring value to the Officio, then there really is no reason for you to reject her offer. Of course, thef act remains that Mami Tomoe would have to take responsibility for Girl A. That means training her and making sure that she does not give rise to...incidents of inconvenience.

"O-of course, Kyuubey-san. I understand. One month, and I take full responsibility for her. I will not disappoint you." Another curtsey, executed to perfection, and you nod at her in finality.

Something you'd like a little less of here in the Officio. Happy Magical Girls made for Efficient Magical Girls, after all, even if it dampened their output some.

"If...if you'd like, Kyuubey-san, I can take you to her room in the medical floor, at least, where she's recovering." Mami pipes up suddenly. "For you to see her, and for her to thank you properly."

Another surprise. You've always considered your job to be a thankless one, although not for lack of gratitude. You just didn't think that this was worth thanking.

You accept the offer. You have a few contracts lined up to be made today, as well as some administrative tasks to take care of - but it's not like you can't spare the time. You have one of your agents looking after one of your prospects this very moment, in any case, so it won't be too much of a hassle.

In any case, Mami Tomoe was kind enough to carry you in her arms after you've finished off your breakfast - another flush of pleasure coloring her cheeks as she makes note of how eagerly you've devoured her pan-made creations. You tell her that it's simply because you worked through the previous night - and this earns you a rather affectionate pat on the head, along with the mild admonishment that you should take care of yourself better. Officio Incubators are, after all, the lynchpin of the organization they lead. Without them, they would come apart, and all too easily.

You refrain from telling her that she'd just unknowingly recited the purpose of a Warmaster. With your belly full of pancakes and your form nestled quite comfortably in a warm pair of arms, resting against an even warmer and softer bosom encased in Magical Girl costume fabric - you don't trust yourself to say much of anything at all.

Base pleasures. Sanbey can just go and throw himself out of an airlock for all you care.

A brief elevator ride and a walk through the rest of the medical floor later - the Magical Girls passing you by stopping in their tracks and saluting in your direction - and you come upon the door leading to the very last recovery room in this particular area, with a blue-haired Eversor staying guard outside. She immediately snaps to attention as both you and Mami Tomoe approach - and you recognize her immediately as Miki Sayaka, one of your top Eversors and Kirika Kure's own prodigy. She rips off a picture-perfect, textbook salute as Mami stops in front of her, and you note just how...well, immaculate her Soul Gem is. It's bright enough that it's blinding.

"Good morning, Sayaka-chan." Mami smiles at this blue-haired Eversor that you personally contracted - a rather messy affair, really, and involved a young man of some sort that you somehow cannot remember - and you blink as Sayaka's cheeks redden despite the formally-stiff expression of almost fanatical zeal on her face, making it look quite...well, childlike. "We're here to visit Girl A. Personal request by the Incubator. Can you show us in?"

"O-of course!" Another salute, Sayaka's eager voice trembling just the slightest bit as she turns around smartly on her heel and giving the doorknob a neat twist. She pushes the door open, before turning around once more and stepping to the side. "The prisoner has been relatively quiet for the past eight hours, Mami-san, Kyuubey. The nurses say that she's still heavily sedated for the time being." It's then that a brief expression of sympathy crosses her features. "She's...well, she's got a lot of healing to do. They say we can only do so much with magic."

You nod at this, silently, and it's then that you watch Mami shake her head. "No, Sayaka-chan. She's not our prisoner." The blonde says carefully, still with a smile on he face. "We talked about this. We rescued her. Even if she seems to be contracted by someone else, a fellow Magical Girl--"

"--is an enemy until it's proven that she's one of us," Sayaka smartly cuts in, looking at you for approval. Mami clicks her tongue at this, and the blue-haired Eversor smiles awkwardly. "Y-yeah, yeah, I know it sounds a bit extreme. B-but that's what Kyuubey taught us. It's in the Magical Girl Primer, isn't it?"

"Yes," you say after a moment, blinking. Of course it was. You wrote it yourself. How could you forget? It's practically at one of the very first pages. Not the exact line, of course, but the thought was there. But even with your confirmation, Mami seems to be adamant. "I get what you're coming from, Sayaka-chan, but she isn't our prisoner. We rescued her, and even if we're not working under the same Incubator, we shouldn't be suspicious of each other to that extent." A smile. "After all, when it comes down to it, Magical Girls have almost the same kind of wish, don't they?"

No, no they do not, you want to reply. But you hold your tongue, listening to them argue instead. It was more interesting that way. It always was.

It's after a few moments more of spirited debate does Sayaka finally cave in, grumbling slightly but still obviously in high spirits as she leads you and Mami into the room. Inside is Girl A - off her ventilator, but still hooked up to a few machines to keep track of her vital signs. An IV bag drip is dripping designer painkillers into her bloodstream, and you wonder slightly if that's going to impair the communication process some.

Well, one way to find out. You turn to Sayaka and ask her about Girl A's Soul Gem.

The blue-haired Eversor produces it without any flair or preamble, the brass-gilded Soul Gem manifests on top of her gloved palm with a faint glow of purple light. It's...it could stand to have a few Soul Gems, to be honest, you're not liking how dirty it looks. But for someone who's been stuck inside a Witch's Barrier for who knows how long - it looks like the corruption's more along the lines of routine magic usage than anything else. A few Soul Gems could clear it up, and easily. You make a note to have some delivered here before too long - and it's only then that you hop out of your comfortable perch to land at the foot of Girl A's bed. Sayaka places the Soul Gem in front of you with an almost reverent care - before stepping back and drawing a sword from the depths of her cake.

"Sayaka-chan...?" Mami starts to ask, her eyes widening, but Sayaka smiles at her, before shrugging. "J-just in case, you know? It can't hurt to be prepared."

Yes. It definitely can't hurt.

You reach over and briefly pulse a small amount of magic into Girl A's Soul Gem. Not enough to hurt, but simply enough to get her awake, to jolt her out of consciousness.

It works, and Girl A snaps awake with a whimper - and her eyes flutter open just as you turn back towards her. A greeting and a question poised over your lips.

You were not expecting her to scream bloody murder at you, before aiming what appears to be a large caliber firearm at your face.

Having your skull blown apart in a thunderous report tends to do that.

Immediately, something on the somnolent girl's person starts to ring. Her cellphone in her shorts pocket, most probably.

You close your eyes briefly, and try to shake off the disorienting feeling of being abruptly murdered, forcing your consciousness to snap to the nearest available body.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/27/12(Sat)11:18 No.21309791

Approximately one year and eleven months ago, you were the Incubator of the Officio of Japan. You had complete control over a thousand Magical Girls, and thrice that in mundane manpower. Your revenue is through the roof, your output unparalleled, and you have enough available funds to start a war - or fund the construction of an off-shore R&D facility where people don't ask questions much. You are also looking into funding small microentreprenurial ventures in the city - those that have to do with print publications. You've heard how profitable they are.

But one of those things is a misnomer, however. Strictly speaking, your Officio isn't the only one established in Japan - although that's the way it should be, ideally. You were the one selected to leverage this particular piece of territory, after all; a selection, you've been assured, that had been made with your key competencies and scalable expertise in mind.

Such was your surprise, then, when you found out that two of your brothers had set up shop in the same country as you. You immediately confronted them about this slight, sensing some wires being crossed somewhere - and they were sufficiently contrite and apologetic enough that you realized that you didn't seem to mind that much about it.

All of you were still starting out, after all, and the assignment was a long one. There was no need to be greedy or territorial just yet - there would be enough time for them to move away and settle somewhere else when they have developed enough of a presence, made enough contracts. There would be enough prospects for everyone.

You left that meeting with their promises that they would not oppose you. This was reassuring - unlike some of your other kindred that had made clear of their animosity towards you even before the assignment began. Not that you took any of the threats they pulsed your way, of course. Dissenters always had a way of dissenting, and their puerile attempts of intimidation did not need dignifying with a response or even acknowledgement.

"Will there be anything else, Kyuubey-san?"

This question is posed to you by none other than one of your best and brightest contracts, a blonde young woman by the name of Tomoe Mami. She'd just placed a platter full of pancakes on your desk, in front of you, and you could already taste the soft fluffiness of them melting in your mouth, the sweetness of the syrup tickling your tongue.

...Sanbey is right. You've gotten soft. Frail. Complacent. Weak. YOu were never like this, never this eager to partake in such base pleasures.

You let Mami Tomoe wait as you take up the supplied fork and knife with your available appendages and inexpertly cut yourself a piece of the uppermost pancake, the one with the heart-shaped piece of butter contentedly melting in its pool syrup. You place the small morsel in your mouth, chew for a moment, and then swallow.

You remark after a moment, careful to keep your voice neutral as always, that these were in fact passable pancakes. Tomoe smiles at this, taking it as the compliment that it is, and visibly reddens with pleasure. She thanks you with a small curtsey, and you chew on another mouthful as you reach over and tap at your keyboard.

The mysterious Girl A. The Magical Girl that Mami rescued.

"Stay for a moment, Mami Tomoe. I want to ask you about this girl."

The blonde young woman nods, the pleased smile on her lips turning into a polite, if guarded one. "Yes, of course, Kyuubey-san. Whatever you need."

Such dedication. Such loyalty.

What do you ask her about Girl A?

Mami shakes her head at your questions. "My apologies, Kyuubey-san, but so far she's been a bit...well, how can I say this?" She spreads both gloved hands before her in a seemingly apologetic gesture of contrition. "We've tried nearly everything to make her talk, but so far we haven't gotten a word out of the girl." A moment's hesitation, before she continues.

"If I may be so bold as to posit my own opinion in the matter, here, I doubt she has anything to tell us, even if we try our usual methods here, Kyuubey-san. Whenever she looks at me, her eyes just look so...empty. So lonely." A mournful expression briefly flashes across her face. "It's as if someone tore her very soul out and wrung it dry of everything that she was."

You carefully manipulate the metal utensils Mami had so kindly supplied you with your breakfast to deposit another forkful of syrup-soaked pancake into your mouth. Well, in so many words, that's what a contract does - but it never affects a contractee to that extent. Crystallizing someone's soul into a gem the size of a bauble does not, usually, overwrite their personalities or drastically alter their outlook. When it does happen, it's usually a faulty contract, an error in the crystallization process somewhere. That kind of mistake is grievous to one's record. Incubators have been executed - through atmospheric immolation - for much less.

You ask her, then, if Girl A might be any worth to the Officio, in her current. Mami nods before you could even finish your sentence.

"I have no doubt about this, Kyuubey-san." Mami Tomoe steps forward, her voice the clearest you've heard it in months. "Granted, I haven't seen her in action, she's still a bit bedridden - but please believe me when I say that she would make a stellar addition to the payroll. Give me...give me at least a month with her, and I'll get her back into operation readiness. She'll be one of the best, that I can assure you."

Well, this is rather a surprise. Mami Tomoe certainly has a kind word for everyone she meets, but this is far and beyond what you've heard from her. What gives her such confidence in her ward, then, you ask?

It's here that she falters. "I...I can't rightly say, Kyuubey-san. I just know it. I suppose you could call it intuition, but..." She glances down briefly at her feet, as if trying to seek the answers from the polished marble tile of your Office. "I...I believe that I was meant to find her there, in Charlotte's barrier, and rescue her. I believe I was meant to rescue her and bring her here, Kyuubey-san. I can't explain it, but it just feels that way. And I know she'll be a key addition to this Officio, if only you'll let her."

This of course is a conundrum. You've always made it a point to...choose your contracts carefully, as it were. You are all too familiar about what sort of damage an unstable contractee could do, with an Incubator's wish fueling her...more destructive tendencies. You have enough trouble with some of the Eversors already, and they were your own contracts. A mysterious girl with her contract made by an unknown Incubator, well, that's just pushing the envelope, now.

You chew and swallow another mouthful of pancake. By this time, you've eaten through nearly a fourth of your breakfast, and usually you'd already be satisfied. That would have been true, had your breakfast come from its typical source. But this was different, obviously. No Culexus, not even your Warmaster's Aide, could make pancakes as perfect as these. As heavenly as these.

You close your eyes briefly, before opening them again.

Soft. Complacent. Weak.

Someday, you will make your brother regret saying that to your face.

You polish off the fifth pancake on the pile, before turning back slightly to consider the dour expression on Girl A's mugshot. Now that Mami had mentioned it, Girl A's eyes do look empty, as if she had been hollowed out from inside. Her dark purple eyes, dull and lifeless, stared back at you from your array of monitors, as if coldly considering what to do with you. It's quite the haunted expression, and you turn away to face an expectant Mami Tomoe trying to appear calm.

You give her your decision, and it's one that brings that bright smile back on her face. If she feels so strongly about Girl A and her ability to bring value to the Officio, then there really is no reason for you to reject her offer. Of course, thef act remains that Mami Tomoe would have to take responsibility for Girl A. That means training her and making sure that she does not give rise to...incidents of inconvenience.

"O-of course, Kyuubey-san. I understand. One month, and I take full responsibility for her. I will not disappoint you." Another curtsey, executed to perfection, and you nod at her in finality.

Maybe it wasn't the smartest decision you'd made, at the time. But at the very least, you saw that this was quiet important to Mami Tomoe - and you denying her of her request would have resulted in demoralization. Something you'd like a little less of here in the Officio. Happy Magical Girls made for Efficient Magical Girls, after all, even if it dampened their output some.

"If...if you'd like, Kyuubey-san, I can take you to her room in the medical floor, at least, where she's recovering." Mami pipes up suddenly. "For you to see her, and for her to thank you properly."

Another surprise. You've always considered your job to be a thankless one, although not for lack of gratitude. You just didn't think that this was worth thanking.

There are always more contracts but this girl is intriguing, she is something that should not exist yet does and coobie doesn't like mysteries

Also anyone else think that maybe the reason why supposedly the treatment won't help is that murderface already witched out when pinky ripped her heart out but she got thrown in suspended animation so the transformation never went through? Then when she woke up whatever was making her witch out was gone from her mind along with everything else in there and so she went back to being a meguca but very corrupted by the grief and so she keeps it at bay subconsciously by consuming lots of booze and painkillers

You accept the offer. You have a few contracts lined up to be made today, as well as some administrative tasks to take care of - but it's not like you can't spare the time. You have one of your agents looking after one of your prospects this very moment, in any case, so it won't be too much of a hassle.

In any case, Mami Tomoe was kind enough to carry you in her arms after you've finished off your breakfast - another flush of pleasure coloring her cheeks as she makes note of how eagerly you've devoured her pan-made creations. You tell her that it's simply because you worked through the previous night - and this earns you a rather affectionate pat on the head, along with the mild admonishment that you should take care of yourself better. Officio Incubators are, after all, the lynchpin of the organization they lead. Without them, they would come apart, and all too easily.

You refrain from telling her that she'd just unknowingly recited the purpose of a Warmaster. With your belly full of pancakes and your form nestled quite comfortably in a warm pair of arms, resting against an even warmer and softer bosom encased in Magical Girl costume fabric - you don't trust yourself to say much of anything at all.

Base pleasures. Sanbey can just go and throw himself out of an airlock for all you care.

A brief elevator ride and a walk through the rest of the medical floor later - the Magical Girls passing you by stopping in their tracks and saluting in your direction - and you come upon the door leading to the very last recovery room in this particular area, with a blue-haired Eversor staying guard outside. She immediately snaps to attention as both you and Mami Tomoe approach - and you recognize her immediately as Miki Sayaka, one of your top Eversors and Kirika Kure's own prodigy. She rips off a picture-perfect, textbook salute as Mami stops in front of her, and you note just how...well, immaculate her Soul Gem is. It's bright enough that it's blinding.

"Good morning, Sayaka-chan." Mami smiles at this blue-haired Eversor that you personally contracted - a rather messy affair, really, and involved a young man of some sort that you somehow cannot remember - and you blink as Sayaka's cheeks redden despite the formally-stiff expression of almost fanatical zeal on her face, making it look quite...well, childlike. "We're here to visit Girl A. Personal request by the Incubator. Can you show us in?"

"O-of course!" Another salute, Sayaka's eager voice trembling just the slightest bit as she turns around smartly on her heel and giving the doorknob a neat twist. She pushes the door open, before turning around once more and stepping to the side. "The prisoner has been relatively quiet for the past eight hours, Mami-san, Kyuubey. The nurses say that she's still heavily sedated for the time being." It's then that a brief expression of sympathy crosses her features. "She's...well, she's got a lot of healing to do. They say we can only do so much with magic."

You nod at this, silently, and it's then that you watch Mami shake her head. "No, Sayaka-chan. She's not our prisoner." The blonde says carefully, still with a smile on he face. "We talked about this. We rescued her. Even if she seems to be contracted by someone else, a fellow Magical Girl--"

"--is an enemy until it's proven that she's one of us," Sayaka smartly cuts in, looking at you for approval. Mami clicks her tongue at this, and the blue-haired Eversor smiles awkwardly. "Y-yeah, yeah, I know it sounds a bit extreme. B-but that's what Kyuubey taught us. It's in the Magical Girl Primer, isn't it?"

"Yes," you say after a moment, blinking. Of course it was. You wrote it yourself. How could you forget? It's practically at one of the very first pages. Not the exact line, of course, but the thought was there. But even with your confirmation, Mami seems to be adamant. "I get what you're coming from, Sayaka-chan, but she isn't our prisoner. We rescued her, and even if we're not working under the same Incubator, we shouldn't be suspicious of each other to that extent." A smile. "After all, when it comes down to it, Magical Girls have almost the same kind of wish, don't they?"

No, no they do not, you want to reply. But you hold your tongue, listening to them argue instead. It was more interesting that way. It always was.

It's after a few moments more of spirited debate does Sayaka finally cave in, grumbling slightly but still obviously in high spirits as she leads you and Mami into the room. Inside is Girl A - off her ventilator, but still hooked up to a few machines to keep track of her vital signs. An IV bag drip is dripping designer painkillers into her bloodstream, and you wonder slightly if that's going to impair the communication process some.

Well, one way to find out. You turn to Sayaka and ask her about Girl A's Soul Gem.

The blue-haired Eversor produces it without any flair or preamble, the brass-gilded Soul Gem manifests on top of her gloved palm with a faint glow of purple light. It's...it could stand to have a few Soul Gems, to be honest, you're not liking how dirty it looks. But for someone who's been stuck inside a Witch's Barrier for who knows how long - it looks like the corruption's more along the lines of routine magic usage than anything else. A few Soul Gems could clear it up, and easily. You make a note to have some delivered here before too long - and it's only then that you hop out of your comfortable perch to land at the foot of Girl A's bed. Sayaka places the Soul Gem in front of you with an almost reverent care - before stepping back and drawing a sword from the depths of her cake.

"Sayaka-chan...?" Mami starts to ask, her eyes widening, but Sayaka smiles at her, before shrugging. "J-just in case, you know? It can't hurt to be prepared."

Yes. It definitely can't hurt.

You reach over and briefly pulse a small amount of magic into Girl A's Soul Gem. Not enough to hurt, but simply enough to get her awake, to jolt her out of consciousness.

It works, and Girl A snaps awake with a whimper - and her eyes flutter open just as you turn back towards her. A greeting and a question poised over your lips.

You were not expecting her to scream bloody murder at you, before aiming what appears to be a large caliber firearm at your face.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

One year and eleven months ago, you were an Incubator. The Ninth Incubator, to be specific. One of the twenty that survived the horrifyingly dangerous trip to this particular rock in space.

You were never the sentimental kind, but sometimes you wondered what kind of fate befell those who never resurfaced. Those who never took up the call when you finally shook off the teleportation sickness, when the fumes of warp-matter thinned enough that you finally stopped choking on your own bile. Those who never pulsed their response back after the cackling of sleeping gods had finally faded from your ears.

All one needed to do was to convince him that he was getting the better end of the deal.

You are currently on the lap of one of your top Eversors, Kyoko Sakura. She is, predictably, deep asleep - even without consulting a watch, you know that it is much too early for the girl to be up and about, with her being the nocturnal sort. Today was different, however - you've told her to wait for you here, to assist you in meeting two of your prospective contacts today. But you weren't to meet her for another hour or so - no, you were forced ahead of schedule due to a certain Girl A violently reacting to your presence.

It didn't hurt, of course. Well, maybe a little bit, but it certainly didn't sting as much as it would have looked like. You were more miffed at the sudden displacement, the jarring realignment of your reality reminding you more of blasted teleportation than anything else. Still, you were whole, and for now this would do.

+AWaKEN+ was the single word you pulsed directly into the snoring girl's mind, and you probably should have been a bit more gentle, from the way she immediately snapped awake with a shouted expletive and a wince. SHe would have probably tossed you off her lap, too, had you not hopped to the empty spot beside her on the bench just before she did. You make a mental note to be a bit more considerate, next time.

"W-wha? Kyuubey?" The scarlet-haired Eversor slurs slightly, her voice still thick with sleep and muffled alarm. "W-what's...what's going on?" She blearily looks around, crimson eyes creaking open. "What...what happened to the cat I was pettin'? H-he was here a moment ago, he was on my lap and everything--"

You cut off her sleep-addled mumblings with a greeting, and a brief reminder to straighten up. She does so after a few moments, smacking her lips and scratching at her unruly hair, before rubbing the grit from her eyes.

"Yeah, yeah. Okay. I'm up. I'm good. Morning fresh." Kyoko murmurs in a voice that says completely the opposite. "What...i-is it time already? B-but I was positive I had a few hours left to sleep in, still--" She yawns as she pulls out her smartphone, which had ceased ringing a few minutes ago. "Yeah, the contract's not till later, what's going on? I--" She falls silent. "Huh. I missed a call from Mami. Says I need to call back as soon as I can." The Eversor glances at you, puzzled, and you merely nod. She does so, and the other side picks up at the first ring.

The background noise is...well. You could hear gunshots, and what sounds like something hitting finely-honed steel. And shouting, a lot of shouting.

"H-hey, what's going on--" Kyoko starts, and you look up at her in silence as her eyes widen and her color pales. "W-wait, what? Girl A woke up? A-and she started shooting the place...? Where'd she get the--HEY!"

Kyoko exclaims as you reach up with one appendage and snatch the smartphone from her grasp. She opens her mouth as if to protest, but seems to simply frown crossly at you as you hold the oversized device to your ear.

"Kyoko-chan? Kyoko-chan, are you still there? Please tell Kyuubey--" Mami's voice is interrupted by gunfire and what sounds like Sayaka having a really bad day.

You tell Mami that it's you on the line, now.

"K-Kyuubey-san!" Mami exclaims, and you feel a strange tingling in your chest as you hear the concern in her voice. "I was...I was worried when I saw you--her--a-anyway, you're safe, aren't you? You're with Kyoko-chan, now?"

You answer to the positive, while being slightly disturbed all the while. She'd seen you die a few times already, after all. This was not the first occurence, although probably the first violent death you've received for quite some time. She knew about your countermeasures, as much as you let her know, so she should not be worrying one bit.

...The fact that she did, though, strangely makes you feel...good, for some reason.

"G-good! That's...that's good. U-um, Kyuubey-san, I know this is hardly the time, but may I ask for a Culexus to be sent over here, in Girl A's room? She's...she's gone completely berserk. It's...I need her to be shut down for now, until we can figure out what to do. I--"

More gunfire, and you could hear Sayaka screaming at Mami.

"No! NO! That is the last thing we will do! Do not harm her, Miki Sayaka, that is an order!" Mami screams back, and her voice is ragged when she comes back to you. "Kyuubey-san, please, give me authorization. We can't reach the Warmaster for some reason, and you know how she gets...!"

Some more gunshots interrupt Mami's tissue-thin veneer of civility towards Kharn, and you find yourself smiling slightly at this.

What do you decide?

[]Refuse. Have Sayaka take Girl A down. Putting a Culexus at risk is not something you can afford, not now.
[]Accept. Have a Culexus team get there and shut Girl A down, and have her placed her in the Silent Room.
[]Other.

"Kyuubey-san?" Mami's voice comes over the line, uncertain, panicked, fearful. "Kyuubey? Kyuubey, the Culexus--"

+ALPHARIUS+ You briefly close your eyes as you send a pulse of urgency back towards your main Officio Building - your telephatic message surging downward, past the Silent Room floors and into the warded, sealed environment of the Culexus. Where only the truly purified, the truly sacrosanct, could step through.

+Your orders, Incubator?+

You allow yourself a small smile. There was a reason you yourself sacrificed so much to create them. There was a reason you expended so much resources to train them, to hone them into the weapons they are.

If there's anything you learned from your lessons with the First, it's that an Incubator always should have a trump card. Always. No matter the situation.

You had twenty of them, each one much more precious than the last.

+Answer Mami Tomoe's call for help.+ You reply as quickly as you can. +Render Girl A unconscious and harmless. There may be some resistance, so do it quickly and completely. Incarcerate her in a Silent Room afterwards, and have two Culexus stand guard.+

A moment's pause, and you feel a small shape, hewn out of amusement and trepidation, pulsed over to you. You shrug this off - involuntary feedback, most probably from the newest Culexus. +Do you understand?+

+Understood. We are en route.+ A sharp, terse reply, and you cut off the connection with a small snort. You open your eyes again, and you dimly hear Mami shouting your name.

You tell her that help is on the way, and that she should brace herself and Sayaka for their arrival.

"T-thank you, Kyuubey," Mami breathlessly thanks you, before another crash ends the connection rather abruptly. You blink at the Call Ended screen of Kyoko's smartphone, before you wordlessly hand her the device back. she takes it from you, grudgingly, frowning at the screen, and then back at you.

"What...what the hell was that? What was that racket?" She asks after a moment. It seems that all she'd been doing was to ask questions since you woke her.

You tell her, as briefly as you can, that Girl A had awakened, and there were...occurences. You go on to say that things are under control now, and leave it at that.

"B-but..." Kyoko stutters. "That was Sayaka! A-and Mami! And there were gunshots and everything!" Both her eyes wide, she shakes her head. "That's not just an 'occurence', Kyuubey! What the hell was happening over there? What's Girl A doing?!"

You blink up at the Eversor, before repeating just what you'd said. A bit more forcefully, this time.

". . .Christ, why do I even bother asking you?" Kyoko growls. "But...you contacted the Culexus just now, didn't you?" She pokes at an ear with a pinky finger, wincing. "Dammit, tell me next time you're gonna do that, I'm gonna have an aneurysm or something--"

What? She heard your message?

"The hell are you saying? Of course I did." The Eversor snaps. "It was like listening to you screaming into a goddamn megaphone right beside me." She shakes her head. "But...I guess if the Culexus are in charge, then things'll be okay." Kyoko nods to herself. "Sayaka can take care of herself, whatever the hell that was. Mami can, too."

You nod silently at this, before shaking your head yourself. Sometimes, the Eversor could be a bit...irritating. One of your best, sure, but she was prone to getting carried away.

"Well, uh, you're here now, I guess," Kyoko says after a moment, shoving her cellphone back into her jacket's pocket. "What do we do? Uh, the first patsy isn't due here for half an hour. I guess we can just wait for her, or go to the second one." She reaches up with both hands to fuss with the ribbon keeping her voluminous hair tied up in a highknot.

You consider Kyoko Sakura for a moment, and she returns your stare with a slightly quizzical look on her face, one eyebrow quirking up into her hairline. While you yourself are quite eager to get those contracts made - every Soul Gem counted as far as you were concerned - you can't help but admit that the Eversor's little accident had piqued your interest some. While your pulsed message earlier was indeed made in a rather loud volume - to stress upon the recipients the urgency of the situation - you had made sure that only the Culexus would only be able to hear it, tuning into their exact specific frequency. Not even a highly-trained sensitive would be able to pick up on it.

And yet, she did. Curious.

"Uh...Kyuubey?" Kyoko is the first to break the silence between the both of you, her brow furrowing. She tries again, a frown curling her lips. "Hey, boss--"

You cut her off by hopping towards her lap and settling there, coaxing a squeak of surprise from the scarlet-haired Magical Girl. You tell her, in no uncertain terms, that the both of you will just have to wait for the first contract prospect. Going off to the second might make you miss the first, and you despise missed opportunities.

You also ask her if she could pet you while you wait. You've seen her do similar things to stray cats, in any case - surely she can accommodate you, can't she?

There is a very uneasy silence as you feel Kyoko look down at you, and you sense her uncertainty - and awkwardness - at the entire situation. Her hands hovering above you.

"P-petting...? I...uh..." The girl's temperature goes up a few degrees, and you could feel her thighs shift gently underneath you. "W-well, uh, yeah, I've done it to cats, but I've..." She swallows. "I've never had to pet my own boss before, so..."

The same concept applies here, despite the fact that you despise the domesticated felines. If she was at all worried about not being able to perform according to your exacting standards, you promise not to expect too much from someone who swings spears around for a good amount of her free time.

"That's encouraging," Kyoko remarks, before finally running her palm down your back. Her fingers gently raking lines down your skin, parting the white fur momentarily before they shifted back into place. The motion terminating at your lower back.

+Again+, you pulse at her, using the Culexus frequency once more. This time, she blinks, and does so after a moment. "It's...different when you said that, just now. Not like when you normally talk." Kyoko shakes her head, before absently scratching behind your ears. "Eh, I'm probably just still sleepy..."

+Incubator?+ The Culexus pulse towards you.

You tell them to continue with their duties, and to not mind you for a while. As it is, you're enjoying this little session, all while turning this recent discovery over and over in your mind.

Kyoko Sakura may be more useful to you than just an Eversor.

You will have to take note of that.

"S-say, Kyuubey, uh..." It's then that Kyoko speaks once more, hesitantly, bringing you back from your reveries. "I don't mean to bring this up now, but, uh...if it's fine, I'd like to, uh, have my Soul Gem attuned...t-to Sayaka's." You crane your neck slightly to look at her, and she stiffens at your gaze. "It's just s-so we can share Grief Seeds and such, you know! And...and, like, if she gets lost or captured or something, she can easily track me down! And vice-versa!"

You blink up silently at her, before you reply. In the normal fashion. Asking her if she is, in fact, asking you to permanently link two of your best Eversors together in an eternal bond. Where one's death could mean irrepairable harm to the other's sanity and Soul Gem Integrity. Where such an event guaranteed a Witch being produced from what little of the surviving party was left. Notwithstanding the fact that you rarely sent the both of them on the same assignment - more often than not, they were seperate, on different operations.

"But...but think about it!" Kyoko pets you again, a bit harder this time, and you wince slightly at her sudden eagerness. "That means you have two Eversors for the price of one! We can get our Soul Gems cleaned at half the amount of Grief Seeds, a-and we'd be that much more in sync, and we'd never lose track of each other!"

You blink at her, and ask her right out if she was, in fact, admitting to breaking one of the Magical Primer's main rules: that relationships between Magical Girls, even those in the same Officio, is forbidden.

"W-what? I...no!" Kyoko goes a deep red, and sweat trickles down her cheek. "I-I'm not that kinda girl, Kyuubey! We're...we're jus really good friends, that's all!"

How do you respond?

Well, Midori didn't go FLESH OF FALLEN ANGELS when Chiaki used the golden katana. So the golden corruption probably doesn't go to those who are attuned, though the regular darkening might.

Though Kharn did mention something about a possibility of the circuit passing through Midori's soulgem. From my rudimentary knowledge of how circuits work, this could possibly mean that Midori may be subject to anything that passes down from Chiaki's soulgem down into Wally. She may also be aware when Chiaki is experiencing intense discomfort or pain.

You blink at Kyoko's almost pleading expression, the girl evidently banking on your saying yes - and you let out a small sigh as you turn away, resting your chin on her lap. What she says does make sense, but at the same time, you can't help but feel that the downside of the attunement is much too severe to justify it. The fact that she is obviously quite enamored by Sayaka - you did not graduate at the top of your class to be hoodwinked by little girls - would make their attunement a most tenuous, dangerous thing. You don't even want to consider the worst case scenario, which is basically the both of them turning into Witches in the same time.

You make your decision just as Kyoko resumes her petting, this time a bit more gently.

You tell her that an attunement between two Soul Gems takes quite a lot of resources, and that both candidates need to be perfectly compatible with each other. While you appreciate her obvious enthusiasm about cutting both her and Sayaka's Grief Seed usage in half, you tell her that it's going to take a bit more than that for you to consider her getting attuned with Sayaka Miki.

"B-but--" She tries, and you cut her off by continuing.

You'll look into the matter personally, you tell her. You're not saying yes, but you're not saying no, either. You just think that such a serious reallocation of resources needs to be considered very carefully first, and you're nothing if not very thorough. Very careful.

You tell her that her thanks, while appreciated, was not necessary.

That's another thing you found strange with such girls.

Some of them can be desperate enough that they'd believe anything you say, and thank you for it.

A few moments more of peace and quiet, and it's then that Kyoko nudges you. "First prospect's here." Her voice is unusually low-key, right now, and you sense something akin to...guilt, perhaps, staining her words. Or maybe regret? "Little girl with the short green hair. Near the duck pond." You turn towards the directions given, and you see...what looks to be a young woman, barely above elementary age, in what looks to be her own bedraggled pajamas. She looks like she'd ran away from home, and she clutches what looks to be a paper bag of bread crusts with heavily-bandaged fingers.

"She comes around the park every day, before school, to feed the damn ducks." Kyoko murmurs, now scratching behind your ears once more. "Yuma Chitose, I think her name is. One of the old fogies here asked her who she was, I just happened to hear 'em. Told her name AND her age, just like a proper kid, you know?" It's then that you hear a tense tone in your Eversor's words. "Sweet kid. Just, uh, I heard her dad work her hands over with a flat iron. Nearly melted them together. Mother got her jaw broken trying to stop him."

She does look a bit young, but...there's definitely potential there. You could sense it. A contract with her would be quite the considerable addition to your numbers, as it was.

Still...her situation, as it was, seemed complicated. Inconvenient, almost. Is Kyoko sure that she was a prospect? Abusive parent aside, she does look rather satisfied with where she is right now. She's even feeding the ducks with vigor, although her bandaged fingers are clumsy about it.

Something about this prospect is bothering Sakura Kyoko, and you don't need to skim her thoughts to know that. The only problem is that you're not exactly sure what about Yuma Chitose that's got your Eversor all tense, somehow. It doesn't seem to be anything important - you'd know if she was hiding anything that could potentially endanger the Officio, that would just be a very easily-seen red flag - but it was there, and it was niggling in your mind. Like a splinter in your brain.

You glance up at Kyoko and stare up at her. Keeping yourself completely still, not even so much as deigning to breathe or blink. Kyoko blinks at this, before sweating slightly. "...What? Aren't you going to make with the contract? S-she's right there, Kyuubey--"

You ignore her words and keep staring at her. Utterly motionless.

"Kyuubey, I--" Kyoko tries, now flustered under your gaze. "C-come on, she's gonna leave in a little while, a-and people are starting to look at me funny--"

Silence. Utter silence.

"F-fine!" Your Eversor seems to finally snap. "She's...w-well, Kyuubey, come on! Look at her!" Kyoko waves a hand towards the oblivious Yuma, who is currently talking to the slender-necked geese, giggling when one of them plucks the bread crust from her hand. "It's...I know she'll be in a better place if you contract her, but I can't help but feel as if I"m throwing her to the goddamn wolves. I mean, if she's with us, she's not going to get beaten up like that anymore, but..."

You allow the scarlet-haired girl to deal with her inconvenient emotions as you watch her in silence.

"She...she kinda reminds me of my younger sister, alright?" Kyoko spits the confession out like a curse. "Geh, I don't know why you make me have to say it, Kyuubey, it's not like it matters."

It does matter. Quite a bit.

Honestly. Sometimes, they just make it much too easy.

So is she admitting that she has emotional ties to this prospect, then? As she should be aware, that automatically disqualifies the prospect from being a contractee. You've made that abundantly clear to her when she went scouting.

"I know, I know," Kyoko waves a hand irritably. "I swear it's not going to affect my performance much. Just that..." She glances at Yuma, who is now visibly trying not to nod off as she is watching the ducks slowly drift aimlessly on the pond. "Can you make her as someone that, uh...doesn't need to be on the front line?"

You blink at this. That...is doable, but it really does depend on her wish, doesn't it? Whatever it was, anyway--

"I already asked her," Kyoko cuts you off. "Uh. Hypothetically. I asked her if she wanted to be a Magical Girl, someday. While we were eating taiyaki." You frown slightly at this breach of protocol, but Kyoko forges on. "She says she wants to...be the Magical Girl that helps people make their dreams come true. Or...or something like that."

You...you could probably work with that. Still, you devote a couple of minutes reminding Kyoko about her unprofessional behavior. It's unbecoming.

"Yeah, yeah. I just want to see her get away from her folks, and...be happy." Kyoko lets out a weary sigh, before patting you on the head. "That's not too much to ask, is it, boss?"

You're not exactly the authority on what is too much and too little to ask, but sometimes...well, you have to make do with what you're given.

It's to note here that Kyoko Sakura seems to be asking quite a bit from you.

How do you respond?

If the wish is related to the power, then she might gain some sort of intuition or foresight. Help people make their dreams come true by avoiding possible pitfalls or hardships. Her upbringing may incline her to help others avoid the types of hardships that she has experienced during her life as well.

Could make a good functionary or planner or bureaucrat of some sort. At the very least, she might be of some use in making sure a tiny portion of the paperwork required for QB Heavy Industries to exist gets through.

Although there may be a slight problem if she gains a flash of insight into Incubator politics or tries to dig too deeply into such matters.

You shrug off Kyoko's hands and clamber off of her lap, landing neatly on the space beside her, on the bench. You tell her that you hope that this will not be a habit of hers - she knows full well what happens when one gets too emotionally attached to a potential contractee. As a Magical Girl under your employ for quite some time now, she should have known better. Has she forgotten what kind of life a Magical Girl must lead in order to survive?

"I know that," Kyoko tries. "B-but I just...I wanted to get her out of that place, out where her dad can't hurt her anymore, and--"

You cut her off with a pulse of disappointment. You're surprised that she has the gall to ask for an attunement when she went ahead and did something as foolish as this. The Officio is not a charity, it is not some well-meaning hospice for poor and distressed young women and children - it is a place where those prepared to serve went, those without futures or lives to look forward to. Yuma Chitose may be having problems at home, but that was nothing that Social Services couldn't fix, right? How can you, with all of these, rightly consider any of Kyoko's requests as something you should grant?

You are getting too soft, indeed.

You hop off the bench and walk towards Yuma Chitose. Mentally preparing yourself for the huge expenditure of energy about to take place.

Kyoko only stares at you, dumbfounded, as you tell her to keep a close watch on you, in case some Magical Girl decides to interrupt the procedure. We certainly can't have that, now do we?

"R-right." The Eversor stutters, before saluting. "I got your back, sir."

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

One year and eleven months ago, you were an Incubator. The Ninth Incubator, to be specific. One of the twenty that survived the horrifyingly dangerous trip to this particular rock in space.

You were never the sentimental kind, but sometimes you wondered what kind of fate befell those who never resurfaced. Those who never took up the call when you finally shook off the teleportation sickness, when the fumes of warp-matter thinned enough that you finally stopped choking on your own bile. Those who never pulsed their response back after the cackling of sleeping gods had finally faded from your ears.

All one needed to do was to convince him that he was getting the better end of the deal.

You are currently on the lap of one of your top Eversors, Kyoko Sakura. She is, predictably, deep asleep - even without consulting a watch, you know that it is much too early for the girl to be up and about, with her being the nocturnal sort. Today was different, however - you've told her to wait for you here, to assist you in meeting two of your prospective contacts today. But you weren't to meet her for another hour or so - no, you were forced ahead of schedule due to a certain Girl A violently reacting to your presence.

It didn't hurt, of course. Well, maybe a little bit, but it certainly didn't sting as much as it would have looked like. You were more miffed at the sudden displacement, the jarring realignment of your reality reminding you more of blasted teleportation than anything else. Still, you were whole, and for now this would do.

+AWaKEN+ was the single word you pulsed directly into the snoring girl's mind, and you probably should have been a bit more gentle, from the way she immediately snapped awake with a shouted expletive and a wince. SHe would have probably tossed you off her lap, too, had you not hopped to the empty spot beside her on the bench just before she did. You make a mental note to be a bit more considerate, next time.

"W-wha? Kyuubey?" The scarlet-haired Eversor slurs slightly, her voice still thick with sleep and muffled alarm. "W-what's...what's going on?" She blearily looks around, crimson eyes creaking open. "What...what happened to the cat I was pettin'? H-he was here a moment ago, he was on my lap and everything--"

You cut off her sleep-addled mumblings with a greeting, and a brief reminder to straighten up. She does so after a few moments, smacking her lips and scratching at her unruly hair, before rubbing the grit from her eyes.

"Yeah, yeah. Okay. I'm up. I'm good. Morning fresh." Kyoko murmurs in a voice that says completely the opposite. "What...i-is it time already? B-but I was positive I had a few hours left to sleep in, still--" She yawns as she pulls out her smartphone, which had ceased ringing a few minutes ago. "Yeah, the contract's not till later, what's going on? I--" She falls silent. "Huh. I missed a call from Mami. Says I need to call back as soon as I can." The Eversor glances at you, puzzled, and you merely nod. She does so, and the other side picks up at the first ring.

The background noise is...well. You could hear gunshots, and what sounds like something hitting finely-honed steel. And shouting, a lot of shouting.

"H-hey, what's going on--" Kyoko starts, and you look up at her in silence as her eyes widen and her color pales. "W-wait, what? Girl A woke up? A-and she started shooting the place...? Where'd she get the--HEY!"

Kyoko exclaims as you reach up with one appendage and snatch the smartphone from her grasp. She opens her mouth as if to protest, but seems to simply frown crossly at you as you hold the oversized device to your ear.

"Kyoko-chan? Kyoko-chan, are you still there? Please tell Kyuubey--" Mami's voice is interrupted by gunfire and what sounds like Sayaka having a really bad day.

You tell Mami that it's you on the line, now.

"K-Kyuubey-san!" Mami exclaims, and you feel a strange tingling in your chest as you hear the concern in her voice. "I was...I was worried when I saw you--her--a-anyway, you're safe, aren't you? You're with Kyoko-chan, now?"

You answer to the positive, while being slightly disturbed all the while. She'd seen you die a few times already, after all. This was not the first occurence, although probably the first violent death you've received for quite some time. She knew about your countermeasures, as much as you let her know, so she should not be worrying one bit.

...The fact that she did, though, strangely makes you feel...good, for some reason.

"G-good! That's...that's good. U-um, Kyuubey-san, I know this is hardly the time, but may I ask for a Culexus to be sent over here, in Girl A's room? She's...she's gone completely berserk. It's...I need her to be shut down for now, until we can figure out what to do. I--"

More gunfire, and you could hear Sayaka screaming at Mami.

"No! NO! That is the last thing we will do! Do not harm her, Miki Sayaka, that is an order!" Mami screams back, and her voice is ragged when she comes back to you. "Kyuubey-san, please, give me authorization. We can't reach the Warmaster for some reason, and you know how she gets...!"

Some more gunshots interrupt Mami's tissue-thin veneer of civility towards Kharn, and you find yourself smiling slightly at this.

What do you decide?

[]Refuse. Have Sayaka take Girl A down. Putting a Culexus at risk is not something you can afford, not now.
[]Accept. Have a Culexus team get there and shut Girl A down, and have her placed her in the Silent Room.

+ALPHARIUS+ You briefly close your eyes as you send a pulse of urgency back towards your main Officio Building - your telephatic message surging downward, past the Silent Room floors and into the warded, sealed environment of the Culexus. Where only the truly purified, the truly sacrosanct, could step through.

+Your orders, Incubator?+

You allow yourself a small smile. There was a reason you yourself sacrificed so much to create them. There was a reason you expended so much resources to train them, to hone them into the weapons they are.

If there's anything you learned from your lessons with the First, it's that an Incubator always should have a trump card. Always. No matter the situation.

You had twenty of them, each one much more precious than the last.

+Answer Mami Tomoe's call for help.+ You reply as quickly as you can. +Render Girl A unconscious and harmless. There may be some resistance, so do it quickly and completely. Incarcerate her in a Silent Room afterwards, and have two Culexus stand guard.+

A moment's pause, and you feel a small shape, hewn out of amusement and trepidation, pulsed over to you. You shrug this off - involuntary feedback, most probably from the newest Culexus. +Do you understand?+

+Understood. We are en route.+ A sharp, terse reply, and you cut off the connection with a small snort. You open your eyes again, and you dimly hear Mami shouting your name.

You tell her that help is on the way, and that she should brace herself and Sayaka for their arrival.

"T-thank you, Kyuubey," Mami breathlessly thanks you, before another crash ends the connection rather abruptly. You blink at the Call Ended screen of Kyoko's smartphone, before you wordlessly hand her the device back. she takes it from you, grudgingly, frowning at the screen, and then back at you.

"What...what the hell was that? What was that racket?" She asks after a moment. It seems that all she'd been doing was to ask questions since you woke her.

You tell her, as briefly as you can, that Girl A had awakened, and there were...occurences. You go on to say that things are under control now, and leave it at that.

"B-but..." Kyoko stutters. "That was Sayaka! A-and Mami! And there were gunshots and everything!" Both her eyes wide, she shakes her head. "That's not just an 'occurence', Kyuubey! What the hell was happening over there? What's Girl A doing?!"

You blink up at the Eversor, before repeating just what you'd said. A bit more forcefully, this time.

". . .Christ, why do I even bother asking you?" Kyoko growls. "But...you contacted the Culexus just now, didn't you?" She pokes at an ear with a pinky finger, wincing. "Dammit, tell me next time you're gonna do that, I'm gonna have an aneurysm or something--"

What? She heard your message?

"The hell are you saying? Of course I did." The Eversor snaps. "It was like listening to you screaming into a goddamn megaphone right beside me." She shakes her head. "But...I guess if the Culexus are in charge, then things'll be okay." Kyoko nods to herself. "Sayaka can take care of herself, whatever the hell that was. Mami can, too."

You nod silently at this, before shaking your head yourself. Sometimes, the Eversor could be a bit...irritating. One of your best, sure, but she was prone to getting carried away.

"Well, uh, you're here now, I guess," Kyoko says after a moment, shoving her cellphone back into her jacket's pocket. "What do we do? Uh, the first patsy isn't due here for half an hour. I guess we can just wait for her, or go to the second one." She reaches up with both hands to fuss with the ribbon keeping her voluminous hair tied up in a highknot.

You consider Kyoko Sakura for a moment, and she returns your stare with a slightly quizzical look on her face, one eyebrow quirking up into her hairline. While you yourself are quite eager to get those contracts made - every Soul Gem counted as far as you were concerned - you can't help but admit that the Eversor's little accident had piqued your interest some. While your pulsed message earlier was indeed made in a rather loud volume - to stress upon the recipients the urgency of the situation - you had made sure that only the Culexus would only be able to hear it, tuning into their exact specific frequency. Not even a highly-trained sensitive would be able to pick up on it.

And yet, she did. Curious.

"Uh...Kyuubey?" Kyoko is the first to break the silence between the both of you, her brow furrowing. She tries again, a frown curling her lips. "Hey, boss--"

You cut her off by hopping towards her lap and settling there, coaxing a squeak of surprise from the scarlet-haired Magical Girl. You tell her, in no uncertain terms, that the both of you will just have to wait for the first contract prospect. Going off to the second might make you miss the first, and you despise missed opportunities.

You also ask her if she could pet you while you wait. You've seen her do similar things to stray cats, in any case - surely she can accommodate you, can't she?

There is a very uneasy silence as you feel Kyoko look down at you, and you sense her uncertainty - and awkwardness - at the entire situation. Her hands hovering above you.

"P-petting...? I...uh..." The girl's temperature goes up a few degrees, and you could feel her thighs shift gently underneath you. "W-well, uh, yeah, I've done it to cats, but I've..." She swallows. "I've never had to pet my own boss before, so..."

The same concept applies here, despite the fact that you despise the domesticated felines. If she was at all worried about not being able to perform according to your exacting standards, you promise not to expect too much from someone who swings spears around for a good amount of her free time.

"That's encouraging," Kyoko remarks, before finally running her palm down your back. Her fingers gently raking lines down your skin, parting the white fur momentarily before they shifted back into place. The motion terminating at your lower back.

+Again+, you pulse at her, using the Culexus frequency once more. This time, she blinks, and does so after a moment. "It's...different when you said that, just now. Not like when you normally talk." Kyoko shakes her head, before absently scratching behind your ears. "Eh, I'm probably just still sleepy..."

+Incubator?+ The Culexus pulse towards you.

You tell them to continue with their duties, and to not mind you for a while. As it is, you're enjoying this little session, all while turning this recent discovery over and over in your mind.

Kyoko Sakura may be more useful to you than just an Eversor.

You will have to take note of that.

"S-say, Kyuubey, uh..." It's then that Kyoko speaks once more, hesitantly, bringing you back from your reveries. "I don't mean to bring this up now, but, uh...if it's fine, I'd like to, uh, have my Soul Gem attuned...t-to Sayaka's." You crane your neck slightly to look at her, and she stiffens at your gaze. "It's just s-so we can share Grief Seeds and such, you know! And...and, like, if she gets lost or captured or something, she can easily track me down! And vice-versa!"

You blink up silently at her, before you reply. In the normal fashion. Asking her if she is, in fact, asking you to permanently link two of your best Eversors together in an eternal bond. Where one's death could mean irrepairable harm to the other's sanity and Soul Gem Integrity. Where such an event guaranteed a Witch being produced from what little of the surviving party was left. Notwithstanding the fact that you rarely sent the both of them on the same assignment - more often than not, they were seperate, on different operations.

"But...but think about it!" Kyoko pets you again, a bit harder this time, and you wince slightly at her sudden eagerness. "That means you have two Eversors for the price of one! We can get our Soul Gems cleaned at half the amount of Grief Seeds, a-and we'd be that much more in sync, and we'd never lose track of each other!"

You blink at her, and ask her right out if she was, in fact, admitting to breaking one of the Magical Primer's main rules: that relationships between Magical Girls, even those in the same Officio, is forbidden.

"W-what? I...no!" Kyoko goes a deep red, and sweat trickles down her cheek. "I-I'm not that kinda girl, Kyuubey! We're...we're jus really good friends, that's all!"

How do you respond?

Wonder of this attunement is in anyway like what Chiaki and Midori got. I mean, what Kyouko mentions has some similarities but there are also differences.

I guess the question is: if Midori witches out, is Chiaki in danger of going insane?

Well, Midori didn't go FLESH OF FALLEN ANGELS when Chiaki used the golden katana. So the golden corruption probably doesn't go to those who are attuned, though the regular darkening might.

Though Kharn did mention something about a possibility of the circuit passing through Midori's soulgem. From my rudimentary knowledge of how circuits work, this could possibly mean that Midori may be subject to anything that passes down from Chiaki's soulgem down into Wally. She may also be aware when Chiaki is experiencing intense discomfort or pain.

You blink at Kyoko's almost pleading expression, the girl evidently banking on your saying yes - and you let out a small sigh as you turn away, resting your chin on her lap. What she says does make sense, but at the same time, you can't help but feel that the downside of the attunement is much too severe to justify it. The fact that she is obviously quite enamored by Sayaka - you did not graduate at the top of your class to be hoodwinked by little girls - would make their attunement a most tenuous, dangerous thing. You don't even want to consider the worst case scenario, which is basically the both of them turning into Witches in the same time.

You make your decision just as Kyoko resumes her petting, this time a bit more gently.

You tell her that an attunement between two Soul Gems takes quite a lot of resources, and that both candidates need to be perfectly compatible with each other. While you appreciate her obvious enthusiasm about cutting both her and Sayaka's Grief Seed usage in half, you tell her that it's going to take a bit more than that for you to consider her getting attuned with Sayaka Miki.

"B-but--" She tries, and you cut her off by continuing.

You'll look into the matter personally, you tell her. You're not saying yes, but you're not saying no, either. You just think that such a serious reallocation of resources needs to be considered very carefully first, and you're nothing if not very thorough. Very careful.

You tell her that her thanks, while appreciated, was not necessary.

That's another thing you found strange with such girls.

Some of them can be desperate enough that they'd believe anything you say, and thank you for it.

A few moments more of peace and quiet, and it's then that Kyoko nudges you. "First prospect's here." Her voice is unusually low-key, right now, and you sense something akin to...guilt, perhaps, staining her words. Or maybe regret? "Little girl with the short green hair. Near the duck pond." You turn towards the directions given, and you see...what looks to be a young woman, barely above elementary age, in what looks to be her own bedraggled pajamas. She looks like she'd ran away from home, and she clutches what looks to be a paper bag of bread crusts with heavily-bandaged fingers.

"She comes around the park every day, before school, to feed the damn ducks." Kyoko murmurs, now scratching behind your ears once more. "Yuma Chitose, I think her name is. One of the old fogies here asked her who she was, I just happened to hear 'em. Told her name AND her age, just like a proper kid, you know?" It's then that you hear a tense tone in your Eversor's words. "Sweet kid. Just, uh, I heard her dad work her hands over with a flat iron. Nearly melted them together. Mother got her jaw broken trying to stop him."

She does look a bit young, but...there's definitely potential there. You could sense it. A contract with her would be quite the considerable addition to your numbers, as it was.

Still...her situation, as it was, seemed complicated. Inconvenient, almost. Is Kyoko sure that she was a prospect? Abusive parent aside, she does look rather satisfied with where she is right now. She's even feeding the ducks with vigor, although her bandaged fingers are clumsy about it.

Sure she's young, but she can probably spend a few years just training and helping out before we send her off into active duty." She smiles down at you. "Go on, boss. Do that contracting thing you do."

You crinkle your nose. This smells slightly of deceit.

Pretend to refuse this prospect, prodding Kyoko to see if she will reveal more information. If she does, then we can pretend to be convinced by her, making her believe that her opinion is valued, and perhaps making her more open to previously mentioned testing. The girl will likely be useful, so refusing outright would not be a good plan. We need to give Kyoko the opportunity to give more information. Something about this prospect is bothering Sakura Kyoko, and you don't need to skim her thoughts to know that. The only problem is that you're not exactly sure what about Yuma Chitose that's got your Eversor all tense, somehow. It doesn't seem to be anything important - you'd know if she was hiding anything that could potentially endanger the Officio, that would just be a very easily-seen red flag - but it was there, and it was niggling in your mind. Like a splinter in your brain.

You glance up at Kyoko and stare up at her. Keeping yourself completely still, not even so much as deigning to breathe or blink. Kyoko blinks at this, before sweating slightly. "...What? Aren't you going to make with the contract? S-she's right there, Kyuubey--"

You ignore her words and keep staring at her. Utterly motionless.

"Kyuubey, I--" Kyoko tries, now flustered under your gaze. "C-come on, she's gonna leave in a little while, a-and people are starting to look at me funny--"

Silence. Utter silence.

"F-fine!" Your Eversor seems to finally snap. "She's...w-well, Kyuubey, come on! Look at her!" Kyoko waves a hand towards the oblivious Yuma, who is currently talking to the slender-necked geese, giggling when one of them plucks the bread crust from her hand. "It's...I know she'll be in a better place if you contract her, but I can't help but feel as if I"m throwing her to the goddamn wolves. I mean, if she's with us, she's not going to get beaten up like that anymore, but..."

You allow the scarlet-haired girl to deal with her inconvenient emotions as you watch her in silence.

"She...she kinda reminds me of my younger sister, alright?" Kyoko spits the confession out like a curse. "Geh, I don't know why you make me have to say it, Kyuubey, it's not like it matters."

Honestly. Sometimes, they just make it much too easy.

So is she admitting that she has emotional ties to this prospect, then? As she should be aware, that automatically disqualifies the prospect from being a contractee. You've made that abundantly clear to her when she went scouting.

"I know, I know," Kyoko waves a hand irritably. "I swear it's not going to affect my performance much. Just that..." She glances at Yuma, who is now visibly trying not to nod off as she is watching the ducks slowly drift aimlessly on the pond. "Can you make her as someone that, uh...doesn't need to be on the front line?"

You blink at this. That...is doable, but it really does depend on her wish, doesn't it? Whatever it was, anyway--

"I already asked her," Kyoko cuts you off. "Uh. Hypothetically. I asked her if she wanted to be a Magical Girl, someday. While we were eating taiyaki." You frown slightly at this breach of protocol, but Kyoko forges on. "She says she wants to...be the Magical Girl that helps people make their dreams come true. Or...or something like that."

You...you could probably work with that. Still, you devote a couple of minutes reminding Kyoko about her unprofessional behavior. It's unbecoming.

You're not exactly the authority on what is too much and too little to ask, but sometimes...well, you have to make do with what you're given.

It's to note here that Kyoko Sakura seems to be asking quite a bit from you.

How do you respond?

You shrug off Kyoko's hands and clamber off of her lap, landing neatly on the space beside her, on the bench. You tell her that you hope that this will not be a habit of hers - she knows full well what happens when one gets too emotionally attached to a potential contractee. As a Magical Girl under your employ for quite some time now, she should have known better. Has she forgotten what kind of life a Magical Girl must lead in order to survive?

"I know that," Kyoko tries. "B-but I just...I wanted to get her out of that place, out where her dad can't hurt her anymore, and--"

You cut her off with a pulse of disappointment. You're surprised that she has the gall to ask for an attunement when she went ahead and did something as foolish as this. The Officio is not a charity, it is not some well-meaning hospice for poor and distressed young women and children - it is a place where those prepared to serve went, those without futures or lives to look forward to. Yuma Chitose may be having problems at home, but that was nothing that Social Services couldn't fix, right? How can you, with all of these, rightly consider any of Kyoko's requests as something you should grant?

You are getting too soft, indeed.

You hop off the bench and walk towards Yuma Chitose. Mentally preparing yourself for the huge expenditure of energy about to take place.

Kyoko only stares at you, dumbfounded, as you tell her to keep a close watch on you, in case some Magical Girl decides to interrupt the procedure. We certainly can't have that, now do we?

"R-right." The Eversor stutters, before saluting. "I got your back, sir."

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

One year and eleven months ago, you were an Incubator. The Ninth Incubator.

Teleported here with twenty of your brethren in a desperate, last-ditch attempt to save the universe, your business is to establish contracts with as many eligible young women as you can.

And business is booming.

>>21399465

Each Incubator has their own method of establishing a contract, each with his own unique twist to the process.

Some choose to approach their prospect through a dream, passing themselves off as an otherwordly being prone to fits of supreme generosity.

Others choose to follow the media's contemporary portrayal of fictional magical girls, acting like the ridiculous chirping blobs of fur that defecate sugary treats and gemstones(these Incubators you have long since chosen to cut yourself off from, and despite their attempts to reestablish contact, you have considered them dead to you).

A few - thankfully - choose to play up the Faustian Deal pastiche to the hilt, promising disenfranchised young women the justice - the power - that they deserve in order to take revenge on whoever they believe wronged them, in exchange for their souls. This was the approach you'd started out with, and for a while you thought it was a convenient way of going about things.

After all, there was nothing like making it known to the prospect that everything was downhill from then on - that they would have one last chance to do something significant with their pointless, worthless lives. You offered them a beautiful, meaningful death, instead of the slow, ignoble decay that they were currently on.
100% chance of establishing a contract, sure, and you didn't much mind that their life expectancies never went on longer than a week or so before they expired. As long as they gave the output you expected, you thought little else of them other than expendable. Walking biological wreckage.

That all changed when you established a contract with Mami Tomoe.

If you knew how to laugh at all, you probably would have.

An Incubator caring for a contractee. The very thought itself was hilarious, and borderline heretical.

>>21399470

But back to your method. After that particular incident, you...adopted a more business-like approach to establishing contracts. You showed yourself politely and carefully to the prospect, and after waiting for them to settle down after the shock of seeing a talking mutant cat - presented your offer as straightforwardly and as professionally as you could.

What the limitations of their offered wish was.

The possible impact such a contract would make on their lives, and what measures you have in place in order to make sure their transition from being a mundane human being to a mobile killing machine is smooth and hassle-free.

But most of all, you offered them a chance to refuse. A chance to walk away.

That was the most important thing that you learned from Mami Tomoe.

Sometimes, the only thing a prospect needed was help. A hot meal, a place to sleep, a listening ear.

It's with this in mind that you approach the young woman - the child - in her pajamas named Yuma Chitose, who is sitting on the freshly-trimmed grass near the duck pond. The girl watching the ducks with rapt attention, having long since run out of bread crusts to feed the beastly things.

Kyoko is still on the bench, but you know she's keeping watch. If you need her to help you with your pitch, you only needed to look towards her and she would come running.

Yuma Chitose, as it is, doesn't seem to be aware of your presence just yet. Even though you're practically a few feet away from her.

How do you make your approach?

You decide to take a different tack with your approach, at least in Yuma's case. She is young, younger than your typical prospect, at the impressionable age where a talking cat would be considered as more of a curiosity rather than a strange abberation of nature (or a horrifying hallucination). Certainly a bit easier to deal with than skeptical teenagers still on the cusp of puberty, but at the same time a bit more difficult to explain and impress the gravity of the situation to.

Well, you'll cross that bridge when you get to it. Right now, you're not completely sure if what she really needs is a contract, or just a place to stay, which you can probably provide.

You move directly in front of the girl, making sure your movements are slow, deliberate, relaxed. She makes a small, surprised noise at your appearance, one that she makes again as you sit down on your haunches as you look up at her, both your front feet placed firmly on the ground in front of you. Your tail flicking from side to side - and it's with a faint pulse of amusement that you notice her wide, green eyes follow its movement.

Humans can be so predictable sometimes.

"...You're a strange cat," She says after a moment, her brow furrowing at your appearance. "I've always seen cats around here, but...I've never seen one with ears like yours. Or a tail that...that poofy." It's without hesitation that she reaches out with a bandaged hand, and you allow the brief physical contact between her palm and the top of your head to take place. To her credit, she pets you carefully, gently, as if worried that she'd inadvertently hurt you. "You don't seem to have a collar, too...I wonder what you're called?"

The first contact between an Incubator and his prospect is always a delicate thing. No matter the Incubator's approach, it must be approached with tact, subtlety, and the knowledge that humans aren't exactly used to life forms resembling their local fauna exhibiting unnatural behavior such as sentience. Or talking.

"Incubatus Nobilis," are the first two words you pulsed directly into her mind, a pulse that her mind would interpret as something she'd heard in a voice especially tailored to sound trustworthy, innocent, pure. "Incubator in your language. But if you're trying to obliquely ask me to introduce myself, then my name is Kyuubey, Yuma Chitose."

A full minute of her looking at you in utter shock passes, her green eyes wide at you. She does not even notice one of the ducks waddling out of the pond and blundering past her, honking all the while. Despicable creature.

"You...you can talk?" The girl murmurs in surprise, in wonder. To her credit, she continues to pet you, as if trying to affirm your existence, as if this simple act had made it doubtful, a thing of suspicion. "And you...your name is Kyuubey?"

"Correct." You close one eye briefly as her hand gets a bit too close, but you do not angle or cant your head away. She's doing a good job of petting you so far.

"Kyuubey..." She murmurs your name, a small smile on her face, before she blinks again. "W-wait, how did you know my name?"

"I was told of it. A friend of yours brought you to my attention." You jerk your head slightly towards Kyoko's direction, and Yuma turns to glance at her. Your subordinate gives the prospect a smile and a wave.

"Kyoko-neesan? She knows you too?"

"She does." You nod at her. "And she works for me as a Magical Girl. And she told me that you would make for a fine one, too."

Yuma's eyes grow the widest they'd ever been in.

"A...a magical girl? Kyoko-neesan's a magical girl--" She glances back at the crimson-haired Eversor, before whirling back to face you. "A-and she wants me to be one, too?"

Yuma pales slightly with indecision. "I...I don't...um..."

This is it. This is the opportunity you've been waiting for.

How do you make your pitch? How you do so will decide the proceedings from here on in.

And I just realized this makes kyuubey sound like a pimp which I am not sure is a step up or down from what he really is

Yuma told Kyouko she would like to "make her dreams come true". Make a pitch obliquely hinting towards that: this would be an opportunity to work towards those dreams, but it won't be easy.

Since this version of Kyubey seems more straightforward and sincere, this could be the moment to imply some of the risks.

Honestly. A little gentler, perhaps, than our regular pitches, due to her youth.
Answer her questions honestly and fully, and don't pull the punches when it comes to explaining what will be expected of her, of how much killing will be involved, and how death is assured. At best, she dies in the line of duty.
At worst, one of her friends will have to come and kill her.

Ask her what she wants from life and what she hopes to accomplish. What kind of mark would she want to leave on the world, that type of thing.

This QB appears to be more honest than his PMM counterpart, but he still has his priorities. You shake your head after a moment's consideration. "No," you begin. "Kyoko merely said that you would make for a fine Magical Girl. She only asked that I give you the choice to be one. And what you do with that choice is up to you, and no one else. Not me, and certainly not her."

Confusion muddles Yuma's expression, silence muffling the obvious questions she looks mere moments away from asking. It takes her a moment to finally spit one out, and it's the question that's rarely asked, and yet the most important. You find yourself impressed with her, and that is even rarer.

"Why me?"

Other prospects would not have bothered with such questions. They would have either jumped at your offer or simply asked for your terms. Never an explanation as to why.

When you answer, it's with frank honesty. Children, at the very least, appreciate such. They are still far too young to develop a sense of guile and mistrust so common among their older kin. They at least realize how important it is, beyond simple posturing and other bothersome contrivancies.

You tell her why. You tell her about what you know of her, about what Kyoko had told you about her, and what you think of her situation - as pitiful as it is. You have at least the decency not to bring light to her wounds, focusing instead on how difficult it must be to live in such a household. You tell her about how Kyoko wants her to be somewhere safer, while making it clear that your subordinate did not plead with you to make her a Magical Girl. That lie, at least, is something you feel comfortable with making.

By the time you've finished, her eyes are glistening with tears.

"Papa...Papa gets m-mad, but he doesn't really mean it. He...he just gets a bit too drunk, sometimes, but he always tucks me in and tells me he loves me." The girl inhales through her nose, and you force yourself not to wince at the sniveling sound she makes. "Mama...Mama gets angry too, but most of the time she just cries. Sometimes she hurts me, but she always says that it's so that when Papa does it, it won't hurt as much. It...it doesn't work. Not really."

You do not vocalize a reply, because you have none.

"What...what's it like being a Magical Girl? How...how do I become one?" She runs a pajama sleeve across her face. "Is...is it just like what I see on TV?"

Ah. Finally something you can respond to. You nod. "Mostly like that. You become one when you establish a contract with me - a contract of agreement between the both of us." You allow her to look confused once more. "If you agree to work for me as a Magical Girl, then I will grant you one wish. One single wish, and it can be anything in the world that you want." You tilt your head slightly to look at her. "Normally I'd say something about certain disclaimers regarding that wish, but as long as you keep it reasonable and not try to ask for something smart like more wishes, I can grant it."

It's here that her expression brightens, just like any other girl's would have at the mention of the wish. You do not begrudge her of this - in fact, it's a sign that things are going well.

"Anything I want...?" She turns back to Kyoko, who seems to flinch and nearly drop her smartphone onto the cold, hard pavement of the park's jogging track.

"Anything."

Yuma turns back to you, indecision and contemplation warring slightly across her features. When she speaks again, her voice is low, barely above a whisper.

"What...what did Kyoko-neesan wish for? Can...can I ask?"

"You may ask, but I cannot answer." You shake your head. "It's classified. Incubator-contractee confidentiality, I'm afraid. If you want to know, you'll have to ask her yourself."

Yuma pouts at this, briefly, before she smiles once more and begins to run her fingers through your fur. "You know, for a Magical Girl mascot, you talk like a businessman. It's...it's strange. I thought you'd be more, more..." she falters.

"...irritating?" You try, attempting to be helpful.

You try to ignore that bit, but somehow it stings a bit more than it should. You will yourself not to show it, however.

"What if I don't want to be a Magical Girl?" Yuma finally asks after a few moments, her voice carrying the tone of curiosity. Again, a good sign. It doesn't seem like she's against the idea of accepting the contract, just exploring her options. "The wish is nice and all, but...fighting monsters and stuff, isn't that dangerous?"

"It is dangerous, yes," You nod. "But being a Magical Girl, you will be fully equipped and trained to deal with the situation. Unlike the Magical Girls you see in anime, we do not send you into battle unprepared and without an idea of what to do. By the time you're in active duty, you'll be confident enough in your abilities that any danger will be manageable to a degree."

You gesture with an ear towards Kyoko. "Depending on your wish, Kyoko might be the one teaching you how to fight as a Magical Girl, and she's one of the best."

Think of it as a consolation gift from me, a small token of thanks for taking the time to listen to my offer."

The green-haired child seems to take this in stride, and when she looks back at you, her eyes seem to be much...older.

"You'll...you'll have Mama and Papa killed, won't you? If I say no?"

No, we won't say that we would because that would be stupid. QB is many things but stupid is not one of them.

We tell her that there is no reason to resort to violence since all it would take is a call to the child services. It's not going to be hard to convince them that they were abusing her since Yuma's hands are covered in bandages.

After that, we could arrange to have her adopted into a nice family or force her parents to behave if Yuma wants to stay with them.

You confirm your suspicions with a nod. "It would be the quickest and easiest way to deal with things, yes. But not both of them, no - I'd have let you choose who would be left alone." She starts to pet you again, a small, sad smile on her face, and you briefly wonder just how damaged the girl is. "It will be taken care of professionally, of course. An unfortunate accident. No evidence of foul play, no witnesses, nothing to cast suspicion over you or your remaining parent."

She is silent at this, but she does not stop her ministrations. "Consider me impressed, however. Not only are you asking the right questions, but you are very perceptive, as well."

That gets a smile from Yuma. "Mama...she likes to lie about the reason why Papa beats me," She says, taking one of your ears gently and brushing her fingers against the golden hoop it's threaded through. "I learned what a liar looks like. What a liar sounds like." She looks at you. "You're not a liar. And Kyoko-neesan isn't, too. I don't like being lied to."

That's...good. It's lucky that you chose to be honest, then.

"I don't want either of them to die, though." She says after a moment's silence. "Mama and Papa, they...they love each other very much. Even I can tell that. Sometimes, Mama cries about how I made Papa hate her. Sometimes, Papa hurts me because I made him hurt Mama." She winces slightly at the memory. "I want them to love each other again. It's my fault, after all."

A moment more, before she nods at you, seemingly having internally arrived at a decision.

"One last question. Can...can Magical Girls die?"

How do you respond?

You nod. "Everything dies sooner or later, Yuma Chitose. You are fighting monsters, after all - and unlike the shows you watch, sometimes the monsters win. Sometimes the Magical Girl herself becomes the monster too, if she's not careful."

Yuma doesn't seem to be shaken by this, so you forge on. "But the important thing here is that by fighting the monsters - and destroying them - you save people. Countless lives are saved with every monster destroyed. Magical girls fight, kill and die so that normal people can live peacefully. So that your parents can live peacefully."

More silence. She doesn't seem to be saying no, but it's better if you fill the quiet. "I would ask of you to keep in mind that this is something that you do not walk away from, Yuma Chitose. There is no way to cancel a contract. If it is established, it is established permanently. Nothing, bar the Magical Girl's death, can break this agreement. So decide carefully."

It's than that you try to lighten the situation. "Do not worry about hurting my feelings by refusing the contract. It is taboo for us to force an unwilling girl into an agreement." You shake your head, being reminded of simpler, messier times.

"That's just bad for everyone involved, really. Better to make things clear-cut. If you have any misgivings or anything of the sort, do not hesitate to say no."

Yuma nods, and when she replies, even Kyoko looks up to listen.

"I'll do it, Kyuubey-san." Her words firm, her eyes hard. She pulls herself up to her feet. "I want to be a Magical Girl. I...accept your contract."

"Kyoko-neesan, I--" Yuma starts.

"Ssh. I heard everything. Well, most of it." Kyoko replies, glancing at you and nodding. "Just let me give her one last chance to make up her mind, yeah? No harm in it, right?"

You nod back. Of course there wasn't any harm in it.

You already know what her final answer would be, after all.

"Now, uh, I heard what Kyuubey told you about being a Magical Girl and all that stuff, and while he's mostly correct, there's some things--"

"I know. I know there's a lot more I need to learn, Kyoko-neesan." Yuma cuts your subordinate off. "But...this way, Mama and Papa can love each other without me around, right? And I can help Kyoko-neesan, at least!"

"..." Kyoko frowns at this, glaring at you. You didn't even need to probe her thoughts - the look itself asked you, in rather colorful language typical of the redhead, about what sort of nonsense you filled the girl's brains in. You would have shrugged if you could.

"I don't really need help, Yuma-chan." Kyoko tries to work up a smile. "L-look, let me just talk to your Papa, okay? I can straighten things out. You don't have to be a Magical Girl for that..."

Kyoko lets out a sigh, before turning to you and nodding. Despite the fact that she'd jus tried to dissuade your prospect, she flashes you a small smile and a thumbs up, as if pleased with herself in a rather weary, resigned way.

Perhaps she changed her mind suddenly, deciding against having Yuma turned into a Magical Girl. Or maybe she just wanted to make sure that Yuma had someone to help her decide, someone who would help them say no when they were afraid to. Something you remember that Kyoko didn't really have - in fact, her contract was the quickest one you'd ever established. She jumped on the chance, no hesitation whatsoever.

"Alright. Guess I can't say anything else, then." Your subordinate ruffles Yuma's hair, eliciting a squeak from your prospect. "Go on. Make your wish. Become a Magical Girl. Kyuubey's waiting."

Yuma nods, and steps forward. Facing you down, maintaining eye contact with you.

"I'm ready, Kyuubey-san." She says, slightly out of breath. "I want to do it. I want to make a Wish. I want to be a Magical Girl."

Success.

"Very well, then." You give her a slow nod, and ever so gently, you reach up towards her with your ears - the tips brushing against the center of her chest. Briefly making contact where her Soul Gem, once manifested, should be coaxed out of.

"What wish shall your Soul Gem shine brightly with, Yuma Chitose?"

She murmurs her wish. It is a simple one. A childish one. But not an easy one, not by any standard.

But you are the Ninth Incubator, and this is not Amateur Hour.

Her wish is granted and her Soul Gem - glowing a brilliant emerald green - is perfectly formed even before she could crumple to the ground, rendered unconscious by the pain. Kyoko proves quick enough to catch her, at least.

"...That's a wrap, I guess." Kyoko murmurs as she cradles the limp, unconscious form of Chitose Yuma to her chest. She glances down at you, and you feel her worry pulsed to you in a weak, unfocused blurt. "Er...Kyuubey? Are you alright?"

You take a moment to reply, clasping the newly-formed Soul Gem with both ears. "Fine," You say, inwardly horrified at how weak you sounded. "...Her wish was a bit complicated, but I managed to find a suitable workaround. I merely need to rest for a while." You make to move forward, before crumpling into the grass, face-first. Perhaps...perhaps now would be a good time to do so, you note. At least the grass is comfortable. Maybe an hour or two would be enough.

"...If you say so. I'll, uh, bring Yuma back to headquarters then, yeah?" Kyoko nods towards the sleeping girl in her arms. "Have her sleep off the effects and everything. Er, what's her rank, anyway?"

You open one eye to look up at Kyoko Sakura, inwardly debating if you should tell her - before letting out a sigh. She might as well know.

"Whoa, a Culexus?" Kyoko blinks, grinning. "Wow. I guess that's cool, but..." she frowns. "H-hey, does that mean she'll have to wear that skull suit thing every day?"

"Not until after her training, which will take a while." You reply, closing your eye once more. "Don't let me detain you, Kyoko Sakura. Go on and get Yuma Chitose back to headquarters. And tell Mami Tomoe to drive over here to fetch me as soon as she can."

We still got her contracted, but we didn't tell her that we also kill lots of humans, too. Especially if we order the purging of an entire company.

"Alright, boss." Your red-haired subordinate moves to obey. "Er, well, what about the second patsy? Do I reschedule, or...?"

"I'm in no shape to make another contract, so you'll have to reschedule. Bring Mikuni Oriko my apologies, and tell her that we'll be having lunch tomorrow instead."

"Right." A small nod from Kyoko, and she walks off, leaving you to suffer alone.

Being an Incubator is suffering, and it is not as easy as it was at first.

You open your eyes again for what seems like the final time before you fall unconscious - and this time a young woman with pink hair stands in front of you, in a pink dress with a rather frilly, poofy skirt.

The last thing you see is her smile as she reaches towards you with a claw-tipped hand stained with blood.

That's interesting, then.
That means that it's in QB's interests to farm Witches when possible, so that their familiars become Witches and can provide Grief Seeds (maybe the purpose of Walpurgisnacht), and it's actually more in his interest to preserve the lives and efficiency of his Magical Girls; he needs them to use the Grief Seeds so he can turn them into energy, and making new Magical Girls cuts into his quota and reserves.
There's probably also diminishing returns if you just contract a girl only for her to Witch out. It takes more energy to create a Magical Girl than the energy received from a Grief Seed.

I think that witches in this setting are a lot more powerful that the ones in the series. Remember how in the Mami flashback that the witch Charlotte had multiple cake snake bodies in her barrier? That might mean that they give more grief seeds when they die.

Now that we are on the subject of witches, Charlotte really was the only one we ever saw in this setting right? And we never saw how she died because Mami and Sayaka decided to escape. Makes me wonder if info surrounding witches is something that Deculture is actively trying to hide from us.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

One year and eleven months ago, you were an Incubator. The Ninth Incubator.

Teleported here with twenty of your brethren in a desperate, last-ditch attempt to save the universe, your business is to establish contracts with as many eligible young women as you can.

>>21399465

Each Incubator has their own method of establishing a contract, each with his own unique twist to the process.

Some choose to approach their prospect through a dream, passing themselves off as an otherwordly being prone to fits of supreme generosity.

Others choose to follow the media's contemporary portrayal of fictional magical girls, acting like the ridiculous chirping blobs of fur that defecate sugary treats and gemstones(these Incubators you have long since chosen to cut yourself off from, and despite their attempts to reestablish contact, you have considered them dead to you).

A few - thankfully - choose to play up the Faustian Deal pastiche to the hilt, promising disenfranchised young women the justice - the power - that they deserve in order to take revenge on whoever they believe wronged them, in exchange for their souls. This was the approach you'd started out with, and for a while you thought it was a convenient way of going about things.

After all, there was nothing like making it known to the prospect that everything was downhill from then on - that they would have one last chance to do something significant with their pointless, worthless lives. You offered them a beautiful, meaningful death, instead of the slow, ignoble decay that they were currently on.
100% chance of establishing a contract, sure, and you didn't much mind that their life expectancies never went on longer than a week or so before they expired. As long as they gave the output you expected, you thought little else of them other than expendable. Walking biological wreckage.

That all changed when you established a contract with Mami Tomoe.

>>21399470

But back to your method. After that particular incident, you...adopted a more business-like approach to establishing contracts. You showed yourself politely and carefully to the prospect, and after waiting for them to settle down after the shock of seeing a talking mutant cat - presented your offer as straightforwardly and as professionally as you could.

The possible impact such a contract would make on their lives, and what measures you have in place in order to make sure their transition from being a mundane human being to a mobile killing machine is smooth and hassle-free.

But most of all, you offered them a chance to refuse. A chance to walk away.

That was the most important thing that you learned from Mami Tomoe.

Sometimes, the only thing a prospect needed was help. A hot meal, a place to sleep, a listening ear.

It's with this in mind that you approach the young woman - the child - in her pajamas named Yuma Chitose, who is sitting on the freshly-trimmed grass near the duck pond. The girl watching the ducks with rapt attention, having long since run out of bread crusts to feed the beastly things.

Kyoko is still on the bench, but you know she's keeping watch. If you need her to help you with your pitch, you only needed to look towards her and she would come running.

Yuma Chitose, as it is, doesn't seem to be aware of your presence just yet. Even though you're practically a few feet away from her.

How do you make your approach?

What? We are "Thanks Kyubey" now?

Anyway, let us casually approach Yuma. Greet her with "Greetings Yuma-san", pause and pretend to watch the avian lifeforms that are on the surface of the water and then give her the offer to become a magical girl. Point out that this would be a big change in her life which would most likely stay the same if she turn down our offer

You decide to take a different tack with your approach, at least in Yuma's case. She is young, younger than your typical prospect, at the impressionable age where a talking cat would be considered as more of a curiosity rather than a strange abberation of nature (or a horrifying hallucination). Certainly a bit easier to deal with than skeptical teenagers still on the cusp of puberty, but at the same time a bit more difficult to explain and impress the gravity of the situation to.

Well, you'll cross that bridge when you get to it. Right now, you're not completely sure if what she really needs is a contract, or just a place to stay, which you can probably provide.

You move directly in front of the girl, making sure your movements are slow, deliberate, relaxed. She makes a small, surprised noise at your appearance, one that she makes again as you sit down on your haunches as you look up at her, both your front feet placed firmly on the ground in front of you. Your tail flicking from side to side - and it's with a faint pulse of amusement that you notice her wide, green eyes follow its movement.

Humans can be so predictable sometimes.

"...You're a strange cat," She says after a moment, her brow furrowing at your appearance. "I've always seen cats around here, but...I've never seen one with ears like yours. Or a tail that...that poofy." It's without hesitation that she reaches out with a bandaged hand, and you allow the brief physical contact between her palm and the top of your head to take place. To her credit, she pets you carefully, gently, as if worried that she'd inadvertently hurt you. "You don't seem to have a collar, too...I wonder what you're called?"

The first contact between an Incubator and his prospect is always a delicate thing. No matter the Incubator's approach, it must be approached with tact, subtlety, and the knowledge that humans aren't exactly used to life forms resembling their local fauna exhibiting unnatural behavior such as sentience. Or talking.

"Incubatus Nobilis," are the first two words you pulsed directly into her mind, a pulse that her mind would interpret as something she'd heard in a voice especially tailored to sound trustworthy, innocent, pure. "Incubator in your language. But if you're trying to obliquely ask me to introduce myself, then my name is Kyuubey, Yuma Chitose."

A full minute of her looking at you in utter shock passes, her green eyes wide at you. She does not even notice one of the ducks waddling out of the pond and blundering past her, honking all the while. Despicable creature.

"You...you can talk?" The girl murmurs in surprise, in wonder. To her credit, she continues to pet you, as if trying to affirm your existence, as if this simple act had made it doubtful, a thing of suspicion. "And you...your name is Kyuubey?"

"Correct." You close one eye briefly as her hand gets a bit too close, but you do not angle or cant your head away. She's doing a good job of petting you so far.

"Kyuubey..." She murmurs your name, a small smile on her face, before she blinks again. "W-wait, how did you know my name?"

"I was told of it. A friend of yours brought you to my attention." You jerk your head slightly towards Kyoko's direction, and Yuma turns to glance at her. Your subordinate gives the prospect a smile and a wave.

"A...a magical girl? Kyoko-neesan's a magical girl--" She glances back at the crimson-haired Eversor, before whirling back to face you. "A-and she wants me to be one, too?"

Yuma pales slightly with indecision. "I...I don't...um..."

Yuma told Kyouko she would like to "make her dreams come true". Make a pitch obliquely hinting towards that: this would be an opportunity to work towards those dreams, but it won't be easy.

Ask her what she wants from life and what she hopes to accomplish. What kind of mark would she want to leave on the world, that type of thing.

This QB appears to be more honest than his PMM counterpart, but he still has his priorities. You shake your head after a moment's consideration. "No," you begin. "Kyoko merely said that you would make for a fine Magical Girl. She only asked that I give you the choice to be one. And what you do with that choice is up to you, and no one else. Not me, and certainly not her."

Confusion muddles Yuma's expression, silence muffling the obvious questions she looks mere moments away from asking. It takes her a moment to finally spit one out, and it's the question that's rarely asked, and yet the most important. You find yourself impressed with her, and that is even rarer.

"Why me?"

Other prospects would not have bothered with such questions. They would have either jumped at your offer or simply asked for your terms. Never an explanation as to why.

When you answer, it's with frank honesty. Children, at the very least, appreciate such. They are still far too young to develop a sense of guile and mistrust so common among their older kin. They at least realize how important it is, beyond simple posturing and other bothersome contrivancies.

You tell her why. You tell her about what you know of her, about what Kyoko had told you about her, and what you think of her situation - as pitiful as it is. You have at least the decency not to bring light to her wounds, focusing instead on how difficult it must be to live in such a household. You tell her about how Kyoko wants her to be somewhere safer, while making it clear that your subordinate did not plead with you to make her a Magical Girl. That lie, at least, is something you feel comfortable with making.

By the time you've finished, her eyes are glistening with tears.

"Papa...Papa gets m-mad, but he doesn't really mean it. He...he just gets a bit too drunk, sometimes, but he always tucks me in and tells me he loves me." The girl inhales through her nose, and you force yourself not to wince at the sniveling sound she makes. "Mama...Mama gets angry too, but most of the time she just cries. Sometimes she hurts me, but she always says that it's so that when Papa does it, it won't hurt as much. It...it doesn't work. Not really."

You do not vocalize a reply, because you have none.

"What...what's it like being a Magical Girl? How...how do I become one?" She runs a pajama sleeve across her face. "Is...is it just like what I see on TV?"

Ah. Finally something you can respond to. You nod. "Mostly like that. You become one when you establish a contract with me - a contract of agreement between the both of us." You allow her to look confused once more. "If you agree to work for me as a Magical Girl, then I will grant you one wish. One single wish, and it can be anything in the world that you want." You tilt your head slightly to look at her. "Normally I'd say something about certain disclaimers regarding that wish, but as long as you keep it reasonable and not try to ask for something smart like more wishes, I can grant it."

It's here that her expression brightens, just like any other girl's would have at the mention of the wish. You do not begrudge her of this - in fact, it's a sign that things are going well.

"Anything I want...?" She turns back to Kyoko, who seems to flinch and nearly drop her smartphone onto the cold, hard pavement of the park's jogging track.

"Anything."

"...irritating?" You try, attempting to be helpful.

You try to ignore that bit, but somehow it stings a bit more than it should. You will yourself not to show it, however.

"What if I don't want to be a Magical Girl?" Yuma finally asks after a few moments, her voice carrying the tone of curiosity. Again, a good sign. It doesn't seem like she's against the idea of accepting the contract, just exploring her options. "The wish is nice and all, but...fighting monsters and stuff, isn't that dangerous?"

"It is dangerous, yes," You nod. "But being a Magical Girl, you will be fully equipped and trained to deal with the situation. Unlike the Magical Girls you see in anime, we do not send you into battle unprepared and without an idea of what to do. By the time you're in active duty, you'll be confident enough in your abilities that any danger will be manageable to a degree."

You gesture with an ear towards Kyoko. "Depending on your wish, Kyoko might be the one teaching you how to fight as a Magical Girl, and she's one of the best."

IsOkay, so Kyubey planned on killing Yuma's parents and she guessed right. However the mutant cat face is unreadable.

Answer her with a question: Do you want me to kill them? It wouldn't be too difficult really.

it is not a good idea to imply we'll kill her parents if she doesn't contract, i would be for asking her if she has a better solution to stop things from happening but there is little we can do without her forming a contract.

our way is pretty much 100% guaranteed that her parents won't lay a hand on her again. not counting foster parents though...

Yes, but I think this is a good way to introduce her to the downsides of contracting, without telling her outright about Witching out.
She's very likely perceptive enough that she could work it out on her own if we give her a few more hints.
And then, if she does contract, it'll be all the more binding for having been done with fully informed consent.

No, we won't say that we would because that would be stupid. QB is many things but stupid is not one of them.

We tell her that there is no reason to resort to violence since all it would take is a call to the child services. It's not going to be hard to convince them that they were abusing her since Yuma's hands are covered in bandages.

After that, we could arrange to have her adopted into a nice family or force her parents to behave if Yuma wants to stay with them.

You confirm your suspicions with a nod. "It would be the quickest and easiest way to deal with things, yes. But not both of them, no - I'd have let you choose who would be left alone." She starts to pet you again, a small, sad smile on her face, and you briefly wonder just how damaged the girl is. "It will be taken care of professionally, of course. An unfortunate accident. No evidence of foul play, no witnesses, nothing to cast suspicion over you or your remaining parent."

She is silent at this, but she does not stop her ministrations. "Consider me impressed, however. Not only are you asking the right questions, but you are very perceptive, as well."

That gets a smile from Yuma. "Mama...she likes to lie about the reason why Papa beats me," She says, taking one of your ears gently and brushing her fingers against the golden hoop it's threaded through. "I learned what a liar looks like. What a liar sounds like." She looks at you. "You're not a liar. And Kyoko-neesan isn't, too. I don't like being lied to."

That's...good. It's lucky that you chose to be honest, then.

"I don't want either of them to die, though." She says after a moment's silence. "Mama and Papa, they...they love each other very much. Even I can tell that. Sometimes, Mama cries about how I made Papa hate her. Sometimes, Papa hurts me because I made him hurt Mama." She winces slightly at the memory. "I want them to love each other again. It's my fault, after all."

A moment more, before she nods at you, seemingly having internally arrived at a decision.

"One last question. Can...can Magical Girls die?"

How do you respond?

You nod. "Everything dies sooner or later, Yuma Chitose. You are fighting monsters, after all - and unlike the shows you watch, sometimes the monsters win. Sometimes the Magical Girl herself becomes the monster too, if she's not careful."

Yuma doesn't seem to be shaken by this, so you forge on. "But the important thing here is that by fighting the monsters - and destroying them - you save people. Countless lives are saved with every monster destroyed. Magical girls fight, kill and die so that normal people can live peacefully. So that your parents can live peacefully."

More silence. She doesn't seem to be saying no, but it's better if you fill the quiet. "I would ask of you to keep in mind that this is something that you do not walk away from, Yuma Chitose. There is no way to cancel a contract. If it is established, it is established permanently. Nothing, bar the Magical Girl's death, can break this agreement. So decide carefully."

It's than that you try to lighten the situation. "Do not worry about hurting my feelings by refusing the contract. It is taboo for us to force an unwilling girl into an agreement." You shake your head, being reminded of simpler, messier times.

"That's just bad for everyone involved, really. Better to make things clear-cut. If you have any misgivings or anything of the sort, do not hesitate to say no."

Yuma nods, and when she replies, even Kyoko looks up to listen.

"I'll do it, Kyuubey-san." Her words firm, her eyes hard. She pulls herself up to her feet. "I want to be a Magical Girl. I...accept your contract."

She blinks as Kyoko places a hand on her shoulder, and she looks up at the taller, older girl. Your subordinate smiling down at her, with a faint hint of melancholy.

"Kyoko-neesan, I--" Yuma starts.

"Ssh. I heard everything. Well, most of it." Kyoko replies, glancing at you and nodding. "Just let me give her one last chance to make up her mind, yeah? No harm in it, right?"

You already know what her final answer would be, after all.

"Now, uh, I heard what Kyuubey told you about being a Magical Girl and all that stuff, and while he's mostly correct, there's some things--"

"I know. I know there's a lot more I need to learn, Kyoko-neesan." Yuma cuts your subordinate off. "But...this way, Mama and Papa can love each other without me around, right? And I can help Kyoko-neesan, at least!"

"..." Kyoko frowns at this, glaring at you. You didn't even need to probe her thoughts - the look itself asked you, in rather colorful language typical of the redhead, about what sort of nonsense you filled the girl's brains in. You would have shrugged if you could.

"I don't really need help, Yuma-chan." Kyoko tries to work up a smile. "L-look, let me just talk to your Papa, okay? I can straighten things out. You don't have to be a Magical Girl for that..."

Kyoko lets out a sigh, before turning to you and nodding. Despite the fact that she'd jus tried to dissuade your prospect, she flashes you a small smile and a thumbs up, as if pleased with herself in a rather weary, resigned way.

Perhaps she changed her mind suddenly, deciding against having Yuma turned into a Magical Girl. Or maybe she just wanted to make sure that Yuma had someone to help her decide, someone who would help them say no when they were afraid to. Something you remember that Kyoko didn't really have - in fact, her contract was the quickest one you'd ever established. She jumped on the chance, no hesitation whatsoever.

"Alright. Guess I can't say anything else, then." Your subordinate ruffles Yuma's hair, eliciting a squeak from your prospect. "Go on. Make your wish. Become a Magical Girl. Kyuubey's waiting."

Yuma nods, and steps forward. Facing you down, maintaining eye contact with you.

"I'm ready, Kyuubey-san." She says, slightly out of breath. "I want to do it. I want to make a Wish. I want to be a Magical Girl."

Success.

"Very well, then." You give her a slow nod, and ever so gently, you reach up towards her with your ears - the tips brushing against the center of her chest. Briefly making contact where her Soul Gem, once manifested, should be coaxed out of.

But you are the Ninth Incubator, and this is not Amateur Hour.

Her wish is granted and her Soul Gem - glowing a brilliant emerald green - is perfectly formed even before she could crumple to the ground, rendered unconscious by the pain. Kyoko proves quick enough to catch her, at least.

"...That's a wrap, I guess." Kyoko murmurs as she cradles the limp, unconscious form of Chitose Yuma to her chest. She glances down at you, and you feel her worry pulsed to you in a weak, unfocused blurt. "Er...Kyuubey? Are you alright?"

You take a moment to reply, clasping the newly-formed Soul Gem with both ears. "Fine," You say, inwardly horrified at how weak you sounded. "...Her wish was a bit complicated, but I managed to find a suitable workaround. I merely need to rest for a while." You make to move forward, before crumpling into the grass, face-first. Perhaps...perhaps now would be a good time to do so, you note. At least the grass is comfortable. Maybe an hour or two would be enough.

"...If you say so. I'll, uh, bring Yuma back to headquarters then, yeah?" Kyoko nods towards the sleeping girl in her arms. "Have her sleep off the effects and everything. Er, what's her rank, anyway?"

You open one eye to look up at Kyoko Sakura, inwardly debating if you should tell her - before letting out a sigh. She might as well know.

"Whoa, a Culexus?" Kyoko blinks, grinning. "Wow. I guess that's cool, but..." she frowns. "H-hey, does that mean she'll have to wear that skull suit thing every day?"

"Not until after her training, which will take a while." You reply, closing your eye once more. "Don't let me detain you, Kyoko Sakura. Go on and get Yuma Chitose back to headquarters. And tell Mami Tomoe to drive over here to fetch me as soon as she can."

That's interesting, then.
That means that it's in QB's interests to farm Witches when possible, so that their familiars become Witches and can provide Grief Seeds (maybe the purpose of Walpurgisnacht), and it's actually more in his interest to preserve the lives and efficiency of his Magical Girls; he needs them to use the Grief Seeds so he can turn them into energy, and making new Magical Girls cuts into his quota and reserves.
There's probably also diminishing returns if you just contract a girl only for her to Witch out. It takes more energy to create a Magical Girl than the energy received from a Grief Seed.

I think that witches in this setting are a lot more powerful that the ones in the series. Remember how in the Mami flashback that the witch Charlotte had multiple cake snake bodies in her barrier? That might mean that they give more grief seeds when they die.

Now that we are on the subject of witches, Charlotte really was the only one we ever saw in this setting right? And we never saw how she died because Mami and Sayaka decided to escape. Makes me wonder if info surrounding witches is something that Deculture is actively trying to hide from us.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You...you don't remember who you are.

You are a Magical Girl. That much you're sure of. That much you're aware of.

But you don't remember anything. You can't remember anything.

Nothing, other than the half-muddled memory of a girl with pink hair and black eyes ripping your heart out of your chest.

Oddly enough, you find it comforting. Sure, it's a bit macabre and all, but at least your brain isn't the empty, bottomless void that it currently feels like now.

And it makes you feel just a bit less lonely in your hospital room. At least, you think it looks like a hospital room - the walls are painted a bright, clean white, and the smell of antiseptic is in the air.

Or a series of rapidly-spooling gatling guns hanging from the ceiling, each one leveled at you. Probably moments, seconds from reducing you to hamburger.

You'd move out of the way, but you're manacled down to the bed. There's no slack whatsoever. Whoever calibrated them, you note, knew what they were doing.

What do you do?

[]Examine yourself and your surroundings. Maybe you'll see something to jog your memory. You've probably got amnesia, which sounds like some sort of cheap plot device in some third-rate soap opera.
[]Scream for help.
[]Wait for something else to happen. Try to see if you can remember anything else.

You examine yourself and your surroundings, looking for anything that might jog your memory and perhaps give an explanation to your current situation.

Thankfully, the manacle supposed to be securing your neck seems to have been disabled, so you've got some turning room, at least.

You feel like you should be worried about the amnesia, but something tells you that this has happened before, and you'd been very angry about it one time.

...You're wearing what appears to be a Magical Girl costume that's mainly white, with purple and black accents. A bit of a simple design, one could easily draw comparison to a schoolgirl outfit, but it's somewhat...familiar. Pantyhose is riding a bit high, though, and you squirm slightly in futility at that. You hope it's not going to be a recurring issue, that's going to be really annoying.

The only door leading out of the room is, of course, shut, and from the looks of it you'll have a hard time forcing it open. It looks thick enough to stop explosives.

Other than that, you don't see anything of note. Those gatling guns are still spooling, though. And those alarms are still blaring.

There is a sudden, audible click, and then everything stops. The red lights cease their flashing, growing dim. The deafening klaxons trail off into silence. The gatling guns freeze in their motions, and they fold back up into the ceiling with a quiet noise of heavy machinery.

A few more heavier-sounding clicks, and there's a woosh of hydraulics as the heavy metal door slides open - and a rather pretty bespectacled lady with the most curious eyes and skeletal black claws for hands walks through it, a smile on her face. The smile seems to widen considerably so when she sees you looking back at her.

"Murderface! You are awake, finally!" Her voice even sounds pretty, a somewhat pleasant, silky baritone with just a hint of roughness. It's then that she frowns. "I am very sorry. You have been dormant for a hundred years. Everyone you love has died."

You blink at her. Once, twice.

The pretty lady with the rather freaky-looking back scratchers for hands and shark peepers for eyes blinks down at you in bewildered surprise, before shaking her head. "Well, ah, uh, that is not reply that I was looking for, Murderface. It was just joke, you know? The thing with the hundred years, that is not true. Everyone you love dying, it is not true either." A soft, if nervous, giggle. "Um, this is joke from you, yes? Surely you are just funning me?"

You shake your head after a few moments, looking back up at her with a slightly disapproving frown. You're not sure you like her idea of a joke much, but it's not as if you remember anyone to be too offended by her sense of humor. You ask her again about who you are, tossing in the question about how long have you actually been knocked out.

God, your voice sounds horrible. What the hell have you been doing to yourself?

"It has only been...ah, six or seven hours, I think, after procedure. You looked very relaxed and peaceful, we decided to let you sleep the sedatives off." The woman waves at someone outside your field of vision, and the manacles securing you to the metal table you've been lying on - it's strange, you've thought it was a comfortable bed the entire time - loudly snap open one by one. You pull yourself slowly up to a sitting position, massaging some warmth back into your hands and wrists.

The raven-haired woman looks at you with some amount of concern, although she doesn't look too worried.

"And...well, your name is Murderface." She says after a while. "Some time ago, you gave yourself the name Chiaki Matsuda. I think Murderface is better, but you seem to like the former a lot more. Is no accounting for taste." A shrug of her slender shoulders in her lab coat. "OH, ah, you are also Warmaster. Still in training, not formally ratified yet, but there it is. And you are also my best friend."

A moment of silence. "You really do not remember anything, Murderface? Are you sure? The...the procedure was a success. It was not supposed to have affected your memory in any way."

Chiaki Matsuda? That...that sounds nice. Way better than Murderface, at least.

Warmaster in training? Well, the training bit sounds a bit dodgy, but...Warmaster does have a nice ring to it.

You shake your head no, which earns you a small sigh from the strange woman with the black eyes.

"I will have Souji look into this. Maybe it is simply temporary, something that we simply need to wait out." She reaches forward with her skeletal hands and carefully, gently straightens the collar of your costume, retying the ribbon there. "I am sure you will be ill-mannered and belligerent once more when it all comes flooding back."

A smile. "For all intents and purposes, then, I am your friend, Murderface. My name is Valnikov Kharn. We have been friends for two years, and I will never betray you."

...You like her already.

Ask what the procedure was for and what it did. Then ask what comes next.

We should probably seek out someway to fact check what we've been told, just to make sure no one is trying to take advantage of our failing memory. When talking to people, ask who we are and compare it with what we've already been told to find any discrepancies.

"Hm? Oh, you are asking about these?" The lady named Kharn smiles as she glances down briefly at her own brutally-clawed hands. "Hnn. Well, very surprising. This is actually the first time you have ever asked about them, Murderface." She laughs slightly, before taking your hand with one of hers and helping you down from the metal table. You wince slightly as you feel her cold, skeletal fingers pressing against the skin of your palm, but it's not as bad as you thought. It's almost reminiscient of grasping a loaded gun by the handle.

"Hands and legs were part of the costume at first, when I became a Magical Girl." Kharn says after a moment as she looks you over, fussing about like a mother about to show off her daughter. Brushing lint off your costume here, smoothening some wrinkles on the cloth there.

"It was strange at first, but one gets used to them." It's here that she procures what looks like a penlight from her labcoat pocket, and shines it into your eyes, lifting your glasses up out of the way. "Of course, something happened, and so they are now permanently here. Cannot remove even if I want to. Please open mouth, say aah."

You obey, and she shines the penlight into your open mouth. "Got used to it again, much harder this time. Going to bathroom with these is not very fun." She snaps the fingers of her free hand for emphasis, resulting in a sharp slap of metal that echoes around the room. "Still, one endures. I am alive at least, that is what counts. Close mouth, then, Murderface. Everything is looking okay." A frown. "It is strange, though. Your eyes have not returned to their original color. I was hoping they would."

...Huh. Well, that's something to ask. But what bothers you more, now, is something that she specified during her introduction. If you've been friends for two years, then what was the deal with her talking about how she would never betray you? Did that really need to be said?

"...Yes. Yes, of course, Murderface. It is important. One must state something like that. Trust and friendship can be two different things, one has nothing to do with the other. Some people may say otherwise, but this is the reality of it."

That's...well. Her opinion on the matter is decidedly strange, but with how she is and everything, you can't help but think that it's natural of her to think that way.

You look around the room again, now that you're back on your feet. The table with the manacles look like a modern-day torture device, now that you're viewing it at this angle, with the surface shaped sort of like a coffin. You glance upwards at the white, unbroken ceiling where the gatling guns once were. For whatever procedure they had you in for, it must have been something to warrant that kind of restraint. That kind of failsafe.

"Well, I do not know about you, but I am hungry. I think Souji is making us a late breakfast now, I am thinking. Midori and Misaka should already be awake this time, I heard Misaka shouting for Souji earlier." A sad smile briefly curls Kharn's lips. "Maybe some food will help things along. It has been a very long night for you, Murderface."

Souji? Misaka? Midori? It seems like you should know these people, but don't. Well, you'll be meeting them for this late breakfast anyway, so that's not too high on your priority list. You ask about the procedure instead, what you just woke up from. And what was the deal with the sirens and the military hardware? What kind of procedure needed that sort of...countermeasures?

Kharn is silent as she leads you out of the room, and into a long, steel corridor. Very industrial. Even the floors and walls are steel grating, and there's a real sense of cold, mechanical brutishness about the entire place. You wonder briefly about where you are, but you gather that you're going to find out soon enough. It's not like you're much in a hurry.

It is a bitch walking on steel grating with heels, though. But you're surprisingly used to it.

It takes a few moments for your companion to talk. "Hnn, well, where to start? Our boss sent you here to have the procedure, Murderface. I have explained it to you before you went under, but I will do it once more, just for you." She turns to you and smiles as the both of you reach what looks to be a heavy-duty elevator, one large enough to wheel an entire tank in. "I suppose it is similar to soul attunement, but it is more of...grafting pieces of someone else's soul to another. Forming a permanent link." She presses one of the lit buttons, and the elevator gives a lurch just as its doors close. The sensation of upward movement making your knees buckle slightly.

You glance up at Kharn, who then waves a clawed hand. "Is all very complicated, really. Incubator technology is sometimes hard to explain, and we had to resort to some of it. But that is the idea of your procedure, and it went along fine." She flashes you a grin, one that falls slightly.

"Well...mostly fine. We were not counting on your amnesia relapsing as a side effect. Maybe it is unrelated, but..." she shrugs as she digs into the pockets of her labcoat, drawing out what looks to be a rather battered-looking powder compact. "Ah, here. Mirror, you are needing it?"

You murmur your thanks as you take it from her, before pulling it open and looking at your reflection.

...You don't look that bad. Your hair is a bit messier than you'd like, and it's cut rather short. You have a feeling that it should be longer, but this is fine too.

Your eyes are strange, though. Should they be this black? Even the sclera's black. That's not normal at all, is it?

Kharn looks at you with her own black eyes as you give her the compact back, and she shakes her head.

"No," she replies. "No, it is not normal at all." It's then that she smiles. "But, ah, you have not gone crazy yet, so maybe it is."

Yes. That's exactly what you needed to hear.

The elevator doors open, and Kharn leads you out into a less-industrial part of...wherever you actually are. It looks just like the inside of an apartment, really, and it sort of smells like it, too. Very lived-in.

...Is that pancakes you smell? Are there pancakes for breakfast?

You step forward to investigate further - surreptitiously wiping the drool from your lip with the back of your hand as you do so - when a human missile suddenly slams right into your midsection, in a flurry of brown hair, white labcoat and bright blue dresscloth. You grunt slightly in both pain in surprise.

"Murderface! Murderface is back! Murderface is okay again!" You glance down at whatever it is burying its face into your stomach, yelling into your costume, and you realize that it's a small child.

"Ah..." Kharn blinks beside you, but seems unsure of what to say.

"Murderface, this one missed you very much!" The child looks up at you, her face bright and cheerful. Her face split in quite the wide smile. "W-was worried for a moment when useless brother said you were screaming during procedure, but is okay now!"

"S-sempai? Sempai's here?! She's already awake?!" Another voice blurts from the kitchen, and you see a young woman with green hair walk into view, her crimson eyes wide as she looks at you. Smiling as well - she looks like she's been crying for some time - she runs towards you, seemingly eager to greet you even though you have no idea who she is.

She seems to sense that something is wrong, though, and stops a few steps from you, her smile fading.

"Sempai...? Miss Valnikov, what's wrong?" She looks at your companion, who merely shakes her head slightly.

"Nothing is wrong!" The child, now grasping fistfuls of your costume, tugs at you to get your attention. "Murderface is Murderface? Right? You remember Misaka, don't you, Murderface?"

How do you respond?

"Murderface...does not remember?" The child who calls herself Misaka murmurs as her smile falls, her eyes growing wider. The small hands that had grasped fistful of your costume slowly slackening as she looks up at you. "Murderface does not remember Misaka? O-or Midori?" It's then that you see tears welling up in the young girl's eyes, and her voice breaks just a bit. "Murderface...forgot?"

You look at Kharn, who looks just as much at a loss in this situation as you are. She tries to come to your rescue, however, speaking Russian in soothing, calming tones. It doesn't seem to work, however, as Misaka lowers her head for a moment, twisting fistfuls of your skirt in her small fists - before suddenly pushing you away from her with a petulant shout bordering on a sob. As you backpedal a couple of steps, you catch a glimpse of tears streaking down her cheeks, before she pulls her strange visor over her face. The slits growing green with a small click.

"YOU BROKE MURDERFACE! YOU MADE HER FORGET ABOUT MISAKA!" The girl screams at Kharn, before dashing back into what you think may be the kitchen - the smell of the pancakes are certainly originating from that direction - and you hear a thud, and a surprised groan of pain coming from it. "STUPID OLDER BROTHER! COULD NOT EVEN FIX MISAKA'S PERSON RIGHT! MISAKA HATES YOU!"

"Misaka!" A male voice calls, clearly concerned despite the pain coloring it. "Dammit...Misaka, don't run! Come on, whatever it is, it's only temporary--"

Whoever it was, he receives no reply except a flurry of hurried footsteps, and a door being slammed as hard as a young child could slam it.

"Ah, kids, they are always overreacting, eh?" Kharn tries to break the silence, smiling uncertainly. The young woman with the green hair is still looking at you, although she does look like she's trying to hold back tears. "
Ah, Murderface, this is, ah, Hanegawa Midori, I believe. She is one of your friends, as well. Good friends, just the same as you and I." She smiles encouragingly at the girl. "Now, I will leave you alone for a little bit, I will see what happened to Souji. He is not very good with pain."

Your strange friend with the metallic bits and pieces leaves the both of you in the residential floor's common area. She is the first to speak.

"Sempai...you don't really remember, do you? You don't remember anything? About how we first met?"

You shake your head. Nothing. You should probably apologize for that, huh? You'd think you'd have the decency of remembering after meeting her, but it doesn't seem to work that way.

"N-no, sempai, no need to apologize. It's..." She pauses as she tries to work up a smile. "It's not your fault. These things happen." A moment more, and then she steps forward, wiping at her eyes with the back of her sleeve, before holding out her other hand to you. "M-might as well start somewhere, right? Hanegawa Midori, sempai. I'm formally under your employ as your Callidus. Nice to meet you."

Given that we know we're a magical girl, we probably know what a Callidus is. We should ask Midori to tell us about herself, might jog our memory or at the very least help to start filling in the blanks.
We should of course fact check anything she says with other people's explanations.

You reach for her hand and grasp it carefully, giving it a polite shake. She does the same, but she holds onto your hand for just a bit longer before letting go. You have at least the decency to not point this out - it's apparent that your relapse has shaken both her and the kid from earlier. You give her your name - or what you can remember of it - and the green-haired girl nods at this.

"The pleasure is all mine, Matsuda-sempai." Her smile is a bit brittle, but it seems genuine, at least. "Feel free to call me anything you want. You're my sempai, after all. Although, you mostly called me by my family name, but my given name's alright too."

You consider this. Well, maybe her family name can work for now. You're not all that familiar with her, at least not yet. You ask her, after a few moments of awkward silence, just what a Callidus is.

"...You've really forgotten quite a bit, haven't you, sempai?" Midori shakes her head, before answering you by going into a rather informative, albeit slightly longwinded explanation.

>The Officio Assassinorum was a concept created and pushed by a handful of Incubators, led by Kyuubey, in order to bring a semblance of formalization and organization to contractees all oevr the world. This was mainly to keep territorial disputes and infighting to a minimum. It was also a way to legitimize the operation as a whole, raise it from its clandestine underground status, and basically make the entire thing a well-greased machine running on tangible resources and adequate support rather than counting on the mettle of a few bright, but still decidedly fragile Magical Girls. To prevent the heat death of the universe requires more than just a clean heart, a pure Soul Gem and a handful of grief seeds - one also needs synergy. Bureaucracy. Zazz.

>With the Officio Assassinorum came the classification of Magical Girls. Upon contracting, the Incubator would assign the fresh contractee her rank, whereupon her training, care and support would depend on. The ranks are as follows:

>Culexus: Magical Girls specializing in anti-magic countermeasures.

>Two other ranks, Venenum and Vanus, were once part of the group, but had long since been eliminated, more for their limited combat capabilities than anything else. Those who fell into these ranks were put to work as medical staff and/or intelligence, and were kept from active field duty.

"In short, sempai, I'm your ninja," Midori's smile widens slightly. "Er, well, just don't ask me to steal stuff, or anything. I've never been great at shoplifting."

That sort of limits her usefulness some, but you'll keep it in mind.

You ask her, then, if you were at all close. This question silences her for a good while, along with making her go pale just before she reddens.

"We...w-well, as much as I'd like to say otherwise, sempai, Kharn was exagerrating a bit. I'd like to think of us as good friends, although you've...you've always been distant." It's then that she shakes her head. "N-not that there's anything wrong with that, of course! Matsuda-sempai's a professional!"

...Hnh. Something tells you the girl is hiding something, but it'd probably be a good idea if you don't press the issue. You ask about Misaka, instead. Were the both of you close?

"Tried it myself, nearly got my hand bitten off. You? She's cute as a puppy whenever you're around. A puppy that hands out a lot of guns."

...You can't help but feel terrible, now.

As fun and informative that impromptu history lesson was - you think you could guess what an Incubator is, and the contract's easy enough to figure out - you decide to look for the girl that had given you the most crestfallen, brokenhearted look that you'd ever seen. It was the sort of look that bespoke of the world falling around one's ears; of being told a belief-shattering truth, that Santa Claus is not real. That babies never really come from sentient storks. That no matter how hard you try, you will never be able to save her, no matter how much you sacrifice.

...Wait, where did that come from? Anyway. You tell Midori that you'll go ahead and see if you can't do anything to fix the situation between you and Misaka. She seemed a nice enough girl, even if she was a bit loud. Midori nods after a moment.

"Sure, Sempai. I'll just get started on a batch of your own pancakes, so that when you get back they'll be hot and fresh-cooked." She points somewhere to the side. "Our quarters are there, Sempai. Misaka's is the room closest to the one at the farthest end. You can't miss it." She looks as if she wants to say something else, but seems to decide against it and goes back to the kitchen, leaving you alone.

You follow her directions, easily finding her room. It's not that hard, considering there's a giant tusked robot blocking your path to it. A big, awesome-looking robot with spikes and a giant hammer and everything.

[THIS AREA IS CURRENTLY OFF LIMITS. PLEASE TURN BACK.] The giant robot says in a vox-corrupted growl, the slanted eyeslits of its helm blazing crimson.

You try to reason with the unbelievably cool robot. Seriously, you have not seen a robot as cool as this guy is. Not only is he huge, hulking and mean, but he's also got the tusks and spikes going on. Black and bronze, now that's a combination. Each clawed fist at the end of its armor-encased armos looking huge enough to rip a car in half. This is how robots should be like, you decide. Nothing sleek or aerodynamic, just huge, singularly-destructive automatons that look just as dangerous as they actually are.

...Unfortunately, try as you might, it doesn't look like it's going to budge anytime soon. It does seem to recognize you, however, the eyeslits on its elephantine helm seemingly tracking your every move.

[DENIED. MY APOLOGIES, CAPTAIN MURDERFACE, BUT I WAS SPECIFICALLY INSTRUCTED TO KEEP EVERYONE OUT.] A whir of servos. [ESPECIALLY YOU.]

Well, at least the robot knows your name, which sort of makes up for the fact that you can't fix the situation right now, just like you wanted to. It's probably useful to know that you can, at least, trust the robot to do what he's told, which makes him even more awesome.

You nod at him, and he bangs his massive fist against his equally-massive breastplate, creating a hollow sound like that of a rather deep gong. You'll try again later, probably after you've eaten breakfast. You actually feel rather famished, and this little misunderstanding hasn't helped any.

You hope that things like these isn't the norm. That your amnesia isn't something of a regular deal.

You make your way back to the kitchen after a few wrong turns - and you see Hanegawa Whatsherface - Midori, now your remember - at the stove, wearing a red apron, carefully flipping pancakes. On the dining table, Kharn is somewhat moodily picking at her own pile of pancakes, while a young man with white hair that you fail to recognize is busily typing into a laptop in front of him, his plate of pancakes untouched.

"How'd it go, Sempai?" Midori is the first to call attention to your arrival, and Kharn looks up to offer a half-hearted smile. She seems to be troubled by something. You have the idea that it's about you, but you try not to think about it too much. "Is Misaka alright?"

You report that Misaka is fine enough to have a super cool awesome robot guarding the entrance to her room. You tried to gain access, but you simply just couldn't get through.

"Yeah, she gets like that." The young man says after a moment, his voice somewhat hoarse, but not exactly grating on the ears. "Just leave her alone to cool off. Try again after she'd cried herself to sleep, that usually works." He looks up from his laptop, seemingly glaring at you, before shaking his head and gesturing towards an empty chair. "Sit down, then. Get some breakfast."A moment. "Sorry about fucking up your memory. Wasn't supposed to happen. It's probably temporary."

"Is not your fault. Perhaps..." Kharn frowns. "...No, is impossible. All tests say procedure was 100% correct, perfectly executed. Should have no side effects, temporary or no." She stabs at your general direction with a delicately-wielded fork. "Who we know as Murderface is gone. She is blank slate. Maybe temporary, maybe not. Even if so, we will have to make sure it does not happen again when she comes back for final procedure."

Midori places a plateful of pancakes - lightly buttered, syrup carefully applied - in front of you. "I did my best with this batch, Sempai. Please enjoy them."

You murmur your thanks as the pair continues to talk around you.

"That's a few ways off, don't you think?" Souji glances your way, then back at Kharn. "We're not even sure if that'll be needed."

"If not needed, good," Kharn nods. "But better to be prepared just in case."

You carefully cut a wedge of syrup-soaked pancake with the knife you're given, before spearing through it with the fork. Lifting it to your mouth, you try not to sound too disturbed at what's being talked about on the breakfast table as you chew slowly, carefully. Letting the warmth blossom on your tongue, before swallowing.

These were...good pancakes. Not the best. You've the sudden suspicion that you have tasted much, much better pancakes than these. But in comparison, Midori could have certainly done much worse. They pass.

You turn towards Midori and tell her so. It's the nice thing to do, right?

"T-thanks, sempai." The green-haired girl smiles at you. "It's...I know it's nowhere near as good as Mami-san's, but I'm trying my best to match her."

Ah. That makes sense.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You...you don't remember who you are.

You are a Magical Girl. That much you're sure of. That much you're aware of.

But you don't remember anything. You can't remember anything.

Nothing, other than the half-muddled memory of a girl with pink hair and black eyes ripping your heart out of your chest.

Oddly enough, you find it comforting. Sure, it's a bit macabre and all, but at least your brain isn't the empty, bottomless void that it currently feels like now.

And it makes you feel just a bit less lonely in your hospital room. At least, you think it looks like a hospital room - the walls are painted a bright, clean white, and the smell of antiseptic is in the air.

Or a series of rapidly-spooling gatling guns hanging from the ceiling, each one leveled at you. Probably moments, seconds from reducing you to hamburger.

You'd move out of the way, but you're manacled down to the bed. There's no slack whatsoever. Whoever calibrated them, you note, knew what they were doing.

What do you do?

[]Examine yourself and your surroundings. Maybe you'll see something to jog your memory. You've probably got amnesia, which sounds like some sort of cheap plot device in some third-rate soap opera.
[]Scream for help.

>> ☐ Anonymous 11/09/12(Fri)07:12 No.21500008

((Aww, so maybe the surgery didn't go so well. Also hi deculture))

You examine yourself and your surroundings, looking for anything that might jog your memory and perhaps give an explanation to your current situation.

Thankfully, the manacle supposed to be securing your neck seems to have been disabled, so you've got some turning room, at least.

You feel like you should be worried about the amnesia, but something tells you that this has happened before, and you'd been very angry about it one time.

...You're wearing what appears to be a Magical Girl costume that's mainly white, with purple and black accents. A bit of a simple design, one could easily draw comparison to a schoolgirl outfit, but it's somewhat...familiar. Pantyhose is riding a bit high, though, and you squirm slightly in futility at that. You hope it's not going to be a recurring issue, that's going to be really annoying.

The only door leading out of the room is, of course, shut, and from the looks of it you'll have a hard time forcing it open. It looks thick enough to stop explosives.

Other than that, you don't see anything of note. Those gatling guns are still spooling, though. And those alarms are still blaring.

There is a sudden, audible click, and then everything stops. The red lights cease their flashing, growing dim. The deafening klaxons trail off into silence. The gatling guns freeze in their motions, and they fold back up into the ceiling with a quiet noise of heavy machinery.

A few more heavier-sounding clicks, and there's a woosh of hydraulics as the heavy metal door slides open - and a rather pretty bespectacled lady with the most curious eyes and skeletal black claws for hands walks through it, a smile on her face. The smile seems to widen considerably so when she sees you looking back at her.

"Murderface! You are awake, finally!" Her voice even sounds pretty, a somewhat pleasant, silky baritone with just a hint of roughness. It's then that she frowns. "I am very sorry. You have been dormant for a hundred years. Everyone you love has died."

You blink at her. Once, twice.

The pretty lady with the rather freaky-looking back scratchers for hands and shark peepers for eyes blinks down at you in bewildered surprise, before shaking her head. "Well, ah, uh, that is not reply that I was looking for, Murderface. It was just joke, you know? The thing with the hundred years, that is not true. Everyone you love dying, it is not true either." A soft, if nervous, giggle. "Um, this is joke from you, yes? Surely you are just funning me?"

You shake your head after a few moments, looking back up at her with a slightly disapproving frown. You're not sure you like her idea of a joke much, but it's not as if you remember anyone to be too offended by her sense of humor. You ask her again about who you are, tossing in the question about how long have you actually been knocked out.

God, your voice sounds horrible. What the hell have you been doing to yourself?

"It has only been...ah, six or seven hours, I think, after procedure. You looked very relaxed and peaceful, we decided to let you sleep the sedatives off." The woman waves at someone outside your field of vision, and the manacles securing you to the metal table you've been lying on - it's strange, you've thought it was a comfortable bed the entire time - loudly snap open one by one. You pull yourself slowly up to a sitting position, massaging some warmth back into your hands and wrists.

The raven-haired woman looks at you with some amount of concern, although she doesn't look too worried.

"And...well, your name is Murderface." She says after a while. "Some time ago, you gave yourself the name Chiaki Matsuda. I think Murderface is better, but you seem to like the former a lot more. Is no accounting for taste." A shrug of her slender shoulders in her lab coat. "OH, ah, you are also Warmaster. Still in training, not formally ratified yet, but there it is. And you are also my best friend."

A moment of silence. "You really do not remember anything, Murderface? Are you sure? The...the procedure was a success. It was not supposed to have affected your memory in any way."

Chiaki Matsuda? That...that sounds nice. Way better than Murderface, at least.

Warmaster in training? Well, the training bit sounds a bit dodgy, but...Warmaster does have a nice ring to it.

You shake your head no, which earns you a small sigh from the strange woman with the black eyes.

"I will have Souji look into this. Maybe it is simply temporary, something that we simply need to wait out." She reaches forward with her skeletal hands and carefully, gently straightens the collar of your costume, retying the ribbon there. "I am sure you will be ill-mannered and belligerent once more when it all comes flooding back."

A smile. "For all intents and purposes, then, I am your friend, Murderface. My name is Valnikov Kharn. We have been friends for two years, and I will never betray you."

...You like her already.

Ask what the procedure was for and what it did. Then ask what comes next.

We should probably seek out someway to fact check what we've been told, just to make sure no one is trying to take advantage of our failing memory. When talking to people, ask who we are and compare it with what we've already been told to find any discrepancies.

"Hm? Oh, you are asking about these?" The lady named Kharn smiles as she glances down briefly at her own brutally-clawed hands. "Hnn. Well, very surprising. This is actually the first time you have ever asked about them, Murderface." She laughs slightly, before taking your hand with one of hers and helping you down from the metal table. You wince slightly as you feel her cold, skeletal fingers pressing against the skin of your palm, but it's not as bad as you thought. It's almost reminiscient of grasping a loaded gun by the handle.

"Hands and legs were part of the costume at first, when I became a Magical Girl." Kharn says after a moment as she looks you over, fussing about like a mother about to show off her daughter. Brushing lint off your costume here, smoothening some wrinkles on the cloth there.

"It was strange at first, but one gets used to them." It's here that she procures what looks like a penlight from her labcoat pocket, and shines it into your eyes, lifting your glasses up out of the way. "Of course, something happened, and so they are now permanently here. Cannot remove even if I want to. Please open mouth, say aah."

You obey, and she shines the penlight into your open mouth. "Got used to it again, much harder this time. Going to bathroom with these is not very fun." She snaps the fingers of her free hand for emphasis, resulting in a sharp slap of metal that echoes around the room. "Still, one endures. I am alive at least, that is what counts. Close mouth, then, Murderface. Everything is looking okay." A frown. "It is strange, though. Your eyes have not returned to their original color. I was hoping they would."

...Huh. Well, that's something to ask. But what bothers you more, now, is something that she specified during her introduction. If you've been friends for two years, then what was the deal with her talking about how she would never betray you? Did that really need to be said?

"...Yes. Yes, of course, Murderface. It is important. One must state something like that. Trust and friendship can be two different things, one has nothing to do with the other. Some people may say otherwise, but this is the reality of it."

That's...well. Her opinion on the matter is decidedly strange, but with how she is and everything, you can't help but think that it's natural of her to think that way.

You look around the room again, now that you're back on your feet. The table with the manacles look like a modern-day torture device, now that you're viewing it at this angle, with the surface shaped sort of like a coffin. You glance upwards at the white, unbroken ceiling where the gatling guns once were. For whatever procedure they had you in for, it must have been something to warrant that kind of restraint. That kind of failsafe.

"Well, I do not know about you, but I am hungry. I think Souji is making us a late breakfast now, I am thinking. Midori and Misaka should already be awake this time, I heard Misaka shouting for Souji earlier." A sad smile briefly curls Kharn's lips. "Maybe some food will help things along. It has been a very long night for you, Murderface."

I thought she just told us that when she was talking to us about spending the night with Midori because it was possibly the last chance we had.

Souji? Misaka? Midori? It seems like you should know these people, but don't. Well, you'll be meeting them for this late breakfast anyway, so that's not too high on your priority list. You ask about the procedure instead, what you just woke up from. And what was the deal with the sirens and the military hardware? What kind of procedure needed that sort of...countermeasures?

Kharn is silent as she leads you out of the room, and into a long, steel corridor. Very industrial. Even the floors and walls are steel grating, and there's a real sense of cold, mechanical brutishness about the entire place. You wonder briefly about where you are, but you gather that you're going to find out soon enough. It's not like you're much in a hurry.

It is a bitch walking on steel grating with heels, though. But you're surprisingly used to it.

It takes a few moments for your companion to talk. "Hnn, well, where to start? Our boss sent you here to have the procedure, Murderface. I have explained it to you before you went under, but I will do it once more, just for you." She turns to you and smiles as the both of you reach what looks to be a heavy-duty elevator, one large enough to wheel an entire tank in. "I suppose it is similar to soul attunement, but it is more of...grafting pieces of someone else's soul to another. Forming a permanent link." She presses one of the lit buttons, and the elevator gives a lurch just as its doors close. The sensation of upward movement making your knees buckle slightly.

You glance up at Kharn, who then waves a clawed hand. "Is all very complicated, really. Incubator technology is sometimes hard to explain, and we had to resort to some of it. But that is the idea of your procedure, and it went along fine." She flashes you a grin, one that falls slightly.

"Well...mostly fine. We were not counting on your amnesia relapsing as a side effect. Maybe it is unrelated, but..." she shrugs as she digs into the pockets of her labcoat, drawing out what looks to be a rather battered-looking powder compact. "Ah, here. Mirror, you are needing it?"

You murmur your thanks as you take it from her, before pulling it open and looking at your reflection.

...You don't look that bad. Your hair is a bit messier than you'd like, and it's cut rather short. You have a feeling that it should be longer, but this is fine too.

Your eyes are strange, though. Should they be this black? Even the sclera's black. That's not normal at all, is it?

Kharn looks at you with her own black eyes as you give her the compact back, and she shakes her head.

"No," she replies. "No, it is not normal at all." It's then that she smiles. "But, ah, you have not gone crazy yet, so maybe it is."

Yes. That's exactly what you needed to hear.

The elevator doors open, and Kharn leads you out into a less-industrial part of...wherever you actually are. It looks just like the inside of an apartment, really, and it sort of smells like it, too. Very lived-in.

...Is that pancakes you smell? Are there pancakes for breakfast?

You step forward to investigate further - surreptitiously wiping the drool from your lip with the back of your hand as you do so - when a human missile suddenly slams right into your midsection, in a flurry of brown hair, white labcoat and bright blue dresscloth. You grunt slightly in both pain in surprise.

"Murderface! Murderface is back! Murderface is okay again!" You glance down at whatever it is burying its face into your stomach, yelling into your costume, and you realize that it's a small child.

"Ah..." Kharn blinks beside you, but seems unsure of what to say.

"Murderface, this one missed you very much!" The child looks up at you, her face bright and cheerful. Her face split in quite the wide smile. "W-was worried for a moment when useless brother said you were screaming during procedure, but is okay now!"

"S-sempai? Sempai's here?! She's already awake?!" Another voice blurts from the kitchen, and you see a young woman with green hair walk into view, her crimson eyes wide as she looks at you. Smiling as well - she looks like she's been crying for some time - she runs towards you, seemingly eager to greet you even though you have no idea who she is.

She seems to sense that something is wrong, though, and stops a few steps from you, her smile fading.

"Sempai...? Miss Valnikov, what's wrong?" She looks at your companion, who merely shakes her head slightly.

"Nothing is wrong!" The child, now grasping fistfuls of your costume, tugs at you to get your attention. "Murderface is Murderface? Right? You remember Misaka, don't you, Murderface?"

How do you respond?

"Murderface...does not remember?" The child who calls herself Misaka murmurs as her smile falls, her eyes growing wider. The small hands that had grasped fistful of your costume slowly slackening as she looks up at you. "Murderface does not remember Misaka? O-or Midori?" It's then that you see tears welling up in the young girl's eyes, and her voice breaks just a bit. "Murderface...forgot?"

You look at Kharn, who looks just as much at a loss in this situation as you are. She tries to come to your rescue, however, speaking Russian in soothing, calming tones. It doesn't seem to work, however, as Misaka lowers her head for a moment, twisting fistfuls of your skirt in her small fists - before suddenly pushing you away from her with a petulant shout bordering on a sob. As you backpedal a couple of steps, you catch a glimpse of tears streaking down her cheeks, before she pulls her strange visor over her face. The slits growing green with a small click.

"YOU BROKE MURDERFACE! YOU MADE HER FORGET ABOUT MISAKA!" The girl screams at Kharn, before dashing back into what you think may be the kitchen - the smell of the pancakes are certainly originating from that direction - and you hear a thud, and a surprised groan of pain coming from it. "STUPID OLDER BROTHER! COULD NOT EVEN FIX MISAKA'S PERSON RIGHT! MISAKA HATES YOU!"

"Misaka!" A male voice calls, clearly concerned despite the pain coloring it. "Dammit...Misaka, don't run! Come on, whatever it is, it's only temporary--"

Whoever it was, he receives no reply except a flurry of hurried footsteps, and a door being slammed as hard as a young child could slam it.

And muffled sobbing. Somewhere.

"Ah, kids, they are always overreacting, eh?" Kharn tries to break the silence, smiling uncertainly. The young woman with the green hair is still looking at you, although she does look like she's trying to hold back tears. "
Ah, Murderface, this is, ah, Hanegawa Midori, I believe. She is one of your friends, as well. Good friends, just the same as you and I." She smiles encouragingly at the girl. "Now, I will leave you alone for a little bit, I will see what happened to Souji. He is not very good with pain."

Your strange friend with the metallic bits and pieces leaves the both of you in the residential floor's common area. She is the first to speak.

"Sempai...you don't really remember, do you? You don't remember anything? About how we first met?"

You shake your head. Nothing. You should probably apologize for that, huh? You'd think you'd have the decency of remembering after meeting her, but it doesn't seem to work that way.

"N-no, sempai, no need to apologize. It's..." She pauses as she tries to work up a smile. "It's not your fault. These things happen." A moment more, and then she steps forward, wiping at her eyes with the back of her sleeve, before holding out her other hand to you. "M-might as well start somewhere, right? Hanegawa Midori, sempai. I'm formally under your employ as your Callidus. Nice to meet you."

How do you respond?

Given that we know we're a magical girl, we probably know what a Callidus is. We should ask Midori to tell us about herself, might jog our memory or at the very least help to start filling in the blanks.
We should of course fact check anything she says with other people's explanations.

You reach for her hand and grasp it carefully, giving it a polite shake. She does the same, but she holds onto your hand for just a bit longer before letting go. You have at least the decency to not point this out - it's apparent that your relapse has shaken both her and the kid from earlier. You give her your name - or what you can remember of it - and the green-haired girl nods at this.

"The pleasure is all mine, Matsuda-sempai." Her smile is a bit brittle, but it seems genuine, at least. "Feel free to call me anything you want. You're my sempai, after all. Although, you mostly called me by my family name, but my given name's alright too."

You consider this. Well, maybe her family name can work for now. You're not all that familiar with her, at least not yet. You ask her, after a few moments of awkward silence, just what a Callidus is.

"...You've really forgotten quite a bit, haven't you, sempai?" Midori shakes her head, before answering you by going into a rather informative, albeit slightly longwinded explanation.

\>The Officio Assassinorum was a concept created and pushed by a handful of Incubators, led by Kyuubey, in order to bring a semblance of formalization and organization to contractees all oevr the world. This was mainly to keep territorial disputes and infighting to a minimum. It was also a way to legitimize the operation as a whole, raise it from its clandestine underground status, and basically make the entire thing a well-greased machine running on tangible resources and adequate support rather than counting on the mettle of a few bright, but still decidedly fragile Magical Girls. To prevent the heat death of the universe requires more than just a clean heart, a pure Soul Gem and a handful of grief seeds - one also needs synergy. Bureaucracy. Zazz.

>With the Officio Assassinorum came the classification of Magical Girls. Upon contracting, the Incubator would assign the fresh contractee her rank, whereupon her training, care and support would depend on. The ranks are as follows:

>Culexus: Magical Girls specializing in anti-magic countermeasures.

>Two other ranks, Venenum and Vanus, were once part of the group, but had long since been eliminated, more for their limited combat capabilities than anything else. Those who fell into these ranks were put to work as medical staff and/or intelligence, and were kept from active field duty.

"In short, sempai, I'm your ninja," Midori's smile widens slightly. "Er, well, just don't ask me to steal stuff, or anything. I've never been great at shoplifting."

That sort of limits her usefulness some, but you'll keep it in mind.

You ask her, then, if you were at all close. This question silences her for a good while, along with making her go pale just before she reddens.

"We...w-well, as much as I'd like to say otherwise, sempai, Kharn was exagerrating a bit. I'd like to think of us as good friends, although you've...you've always been distant." It's then that she shakes her head. "N-not that there's anything wrong with that, of course! Matsuda-sempai's a professional!"

...Hnh. Something tells you the girl is hiding something, but it'd probably be a good idea if you don't press the issue. You ask about Misaka, instead. Were the both of you close?

"...From what I've seen of the both of you? Yes, sempai. She, uh..." Midori glances back at the kitchen, where you could faintly hear muted arguing from. "...She thinks the world of you, sempai. Kinda like a heroic big sister. You could always calm her down just by patting her on the head, like so." She demonstrates it with a hand, patting an invisible Misaka on the head in front of her. "Tried it myself, nearly got my hand bitten off. You? She's cute as a puppy whenever you're around. A puppy that hands out a lot of guns."

...You can't help but feel terrible, now.

As fun and informative that impromptu history lesson was - you think you could guess what an Incubator is, and the contract's easy enough to figure out - you decide to look for the girl that had given you the most crestfallen, brokenhearted look that you'd ever seen. It was the sort of look that bespoke of the world falling around one's ears; of being told a belief-shattering truth, that Santa Claus is not real. That babies never really come from sentient storks. That no matter how hard you try, you will never be able to save her, no matter how much you sacrifice.

...Wait, where did that come from? Anyway. You tell Midori that you'll go ahead and see if you can't do anything to fix the situation between you and Misaka. She seemed a nice enough girl, even if she was a bit loud. Midori nods after a moment.

"Sure, Sempai. I'll just get started on a batch of your own pancakes, so that when you get back they'll be hot and fresh-cooked." She points somewhere to the side. "Our quarters are there, Sempai. Misaka's is the room closest to the one at the farthest end. You can't miss it." She looks as if she wants to say something else, but seems to decide against it and goes back to the kitchen, leaving you alone.

You follow her directions, easily finding her room. It's not that hard, considering there's a giant tusked robot blocking your path to it. A big, awesome-looking robot with spikes and a giant hammer and everything.

[THIS AREA IS CURRENTLY OFF LIMITS. PLEASE TURN BACK.] The giant robot says in a vox-corrupted growl, the slanted eyeslits of its helm blazing crimson.

You try to reason with the unbelievably cool robot. Seriously, you have not seen a robot as cool as this guy is. Not only is he huge, hulking and mean, but he's also got the tusks and spikes going on. Black and bronze, now that's a combination. Each clawed fist at the end of its armor-encased armos looking huge enough to rip a car in half. This is how robots should be like, you decide. Nothing sleek or aerodynamic, just huge, singularly-destructive automatons that look just as dangerous as they actually are.

...Unfortunately, try as you might, it doesn't look like it's going to budge anytime soon. It does seem to recognize you, however, the eyeslits on its elephantine helm seemingly tracking your every move.

[DENIED. MY APOLOGIES, CAPTAIN MURDERFACE, BUT I WAS SPECIFICALLY INSTRUCTED TO KEEP EVERYONE OUT.] A whir of servos. [ESPECIALLY YOU.]

Well, at least the robot knows your name, which sort of makes up for the fact that you can't fix the situation right now, just like you wanted to. It's probably useful to know that you can, at least, trust the robot to do what he's told, which makes him even more awesome.

You nod at him, and he bangs his massive fist against his equally-massive breastplate, creating a hollow sound like that of a rather deep gong. You'll try again later, probably after you've eaten breakfast. You actually feel rather famished, and this little misunderstanding hasn't helped any.

You hope that things like these isn't the norm. That your amnesia isn't something of a regular deal.

You make your way back to the kitchen after a few wrong turns - and you see Hanegawa Whatsherface - Midori, now your remember - at the stove, wearing a red apron, carefully flipping pancakes. On the dining table, Kharn is somewhat moodily picking at her own pile of pancakes, while a young man with white hair that you fail to recognize is busily typing into a laptop in front of him, his plate of pancakes untouched.

"How'd it go, Sempai?" Midori is the first to call attention to your arrival, and Kharn looks up to offer a half-hearted smile. She seems to be troubled by something. You have the idea that it's about you, but you try not to think about it too much. "Is Misaka alright?"

You report that Misaka is fine enough to have a super cool awesome robot guarding the entrance to her room. You tried to gain access, but you simply just couldn't get through.

"Yeah, she gets like that." The young man says after a moment, his voice somewhat hoarse, but not exactly grating on the ears. "Just leave her alone to cool off. Try again after she'd cried herself to sleep, that usually works." He looks up from his laptop, seemingly glaring at you, before shaking his head and gesturing towards an empty chair. "Sit down, then. Get some breakfast."A moment. "Sorry about fucking up your memory. Wasn't supposed to happen. It's probably temporary."

"Is not your fault. Perhaps..." Kharn frowns. "...No, is impossible. All tests say procedure was 100% correct, perfectly executed. Should have no side effects, temporary or no." She stabs at your general direction with a delicately-wielded fork. "Who we know as Murderface is gone. She is blank slate. Maybe temporary, maybe not. Even if so, we will have to make sure it does not happen again when she comes back for final procedure."

Midori places a plateful of pancakes - lightly buttered, syrup carefully applied - in front of you. "I did my best with this batch, Sempai. Please enjoy them."

You murmur your thanks as the pair continues to talk around you.

"That's a few ways off, don't you think?" Souji glances your way, then back at Kharn. "We're not even sure if that'll be needed."

"If not needed, good," Kharn nods. "But better to be prepared just in case."

You carefully cut a wedge of syrup-soaked pancake with the knife you're given, before spearing through it with the fork. Lifting it to your mouth, you try not to sound too disturbed at what's being talked about on the breakfast table as you chew slowly, carefully. Letting the warmth blossom on your tongue, before swallowing.

These were...good pancakes. Not the best. You've the sudden suspicion that you have tasted much, much better pancakes than these. But in comparison, Midori could have certainly done much worse. They pass.

You turn towards Midori and tell her so. It's the nice thing to do, right?

"T-thanks, sempai." The green-haired girl smiles at you. "It's...I know it's nowhere near as good as Mami-san's, but I'm trying my best to match her."

Ah. That makes sense.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and that's pretty much all that you can remember - well, besides the rather strange memory of a pink-haired girl tearing your heart out of your chest. Even stranger is the fact that while you should feel horror with that kind of memory - it certainly looked quite real, real enough that you felt a slight twinge of pain whenever it came to mind - all you feel is relief. A peaceful kind of relief, the kind someone would normally get when they found out that they've been saved at the last minute. Saved from making the biggest mistake of their life.

You should probably be worried about that. Just like you should be worried about how you don't even know anything about the people you're now having breakfast with, or where you're having breakfast at the moment. They seemed nice enough, that's for sure, and you have the strangest feeling that you're someone important to them. The one with the weird hands and legs seemed to imply such. The one with the green hair seemed to REALLY imply such - you're not so stupid as to miss why the pancake at the bottom of your pile was cut carefully and fastidiously in the shape of a heart.

>>21606507

You didn't say anything about that, though. You just tore it apart and devoured it as you did the rest, before clinking your fork against the plate and asking for seconds. The girl nearly toppled over from her seat in her attempt to get up quickly enough from the table, earning a gentle admonition from the freak with claws and a derisive snort from her boyfriend.

There's a bit of a mood around the kitchen, and you guess that it's because of that question you posed just a little while ago. Both Kharn and Midori - you think that's what their names are - had stared at you for a long moment, before looking down on their plates. Neither of them seemingly eager to answer the question. You resumed eating a few moments after that - you still wanted to know, of course, but you didn't want your breakfast to get cold. Maybe you'll save it for another time, another place. The mood was awkward enough as it is.

As you wait for your second pile of pancakes, something falls out of your inventory, hitting your leg on the way down to the floor. You blink at this, and reach down to pick it up. It seems to be a book of sorts. An illustrated novel, competently drawn, too.

"A-ah, sempai, that's--" You hear Midori freeze in her tracks as you lift the book clear from underneath the table.

"Nothing, sempai! E-everything's alright!" She says after a moment, beaming, as she replaces your empty plate with one bearing your second helping. "T-that book, though, um..."

"It's...uh, how do I say this..." You watch Midori wring her hands as she glances at you, at the book, then back again at you, seemingly fumbling for a way to express herself. She vaguely resembles a child trying weigh her options, limited as they were: lie now and risk punishment upon discovery later, or come clean and get the spanking over with.

You glance down at the cover as you wait for her to finish gathering her thoughts, examining it in full detail. Seems like that sort of manga girls buy - the ones with the all-too-large sparkly eyes, dainty physiques and meticulously-drawn flowers adorning every page. The title, The Adventures of Miracle Midori and Murder Mayumi, doesn't give away much of the book's subject matter - but the two girls embracing rather closely just behind the title script does.

"A-ah, ah, um--" You turn towads Midori, and she's going quite red in the face, sweat dotting her brow. "I-it's just a small hobby of mine, s-sempai, i-it's a self-publishing deal, n-not realy all that big to begin with--"

...Oh. So she draws manga in her spare time? That's...that's actually impressive. You haven't really peeked at the pages inside, but judging by the cover alone, this seems to be quite the labor of love. She seems to be really bothered about you holding it, though, and while you're taking a rather perverse joy out of seeing her squirm there, with spaghetti inside her pockets.

"Murderface," Kharn clicks her tongue at you in slight admonishment. "Do not be like that. Give the poor girl her book back."

"Well, um, Miss Kharn, technically it's not mine..." Midori smiles nervously at the raven-haired woman, all while reaching for the book in your hands. You blink at this, pulling the volume away slowly. "B-but, I should probably keep it, just in case...n-no, sempai, let me just take care of it--"

"It's mine," The young man, who'd been furiously typing from behind his laptop, suddenly snaps, and the book is rudely torn from your grasp. "Sorry. I lent it to you earlier, before your procedure. Something for you to read while we got the equipment warmed up." He nods at Midori, while all three of you blink at him - Kharn especially. "Sorry about that, Hanegawa. Didn't mean to make it look like I'm being careless with your work. I'm a big fan."

"O-oh, that's..." Midori seems to be rather stunned at the turn of events, before working up a smile. "E-er, n-no, that's fine, Souji-san. I was just wondering how it got here, that's all. I...I didn't know they delivered all the way here to Siberia."

Strange bunch, these people. All this fuss for a girly manga. You shake your head, and make to work on those pancakes when you stop for a moment, Midori's shaky reply finally sinking in. You look up at all three of them in turn.

...Siberia? That's where you are, right now?

"Ah, yes, Siberia," Kharn nods after a moment, a small, guilty smile on her face. "Just a few miles off from Petropavlovsk-Kamchatsky. Is heavily-fortified subterrenean base, built for Research and Development. Something the Incubator handed over to this girly comics-reading pervert--" She elbows Souji sharply in the side, causing the latter to grunt quietly in pain. "--to develop new toys for the Officio's Magical Girls to use. That includes you, Murderface."

"At the end of the day, all Magical Girls are weapons." She licks at the tip of her fork, accidentally giving you a flash of her..well, remarkably-long tongue. You can't help but stare. "All of us are. The Incubator just rents us out once in a while."

So that's why it felt weird. Of course, you inferred from the rather long elevator ride earlier that you were somewhat underground, and the way this entire floor was made to look like the insides of an apartment did help calm you some - but even then, you felt strangely...imprisoned, somehow. A nagging, needling urge that told you that you shouldn't be here, that you should be above ground. An irrational sensation of claustrophobia, of being...well, buried alive. Horribly morbid, but it was there.

You try to ignore it by shoving another forkful of syrup-coated pancake into your mouth.

Christ, Kharn's got a long tongue. Where'd she get that? Do all Russian girls have tongues like that, or something? Did she get it done? What?

What do you do, now?

[]Ask about the base.
[]Ask about the Incubator.

You have some questions in your head that you'd probably be a whole lot better off asking. Something about the base, for example - something in Kharn's explanation could probably trigger something inside your head, jar your gray matter hard enough that you'd remember something else other than a girl with pink hair killing you Aztec-style. Asking about the Incubator seems like a good idea too - after all, it sounds like he's the one responsible for the entire operation, and while you can't exactly process it, it seems like you've heard of that term before. Either of the two could've been a better option, really, and you do want to stop being the last to be picked up by the Clue Train, here.

But of course you don't pick those options. Not when there's something much more important to ask about, here. Something that needs to be asked about right away, and not a moment sooner.

"What the fuck is up with your tongue?" You hear yourself ask the woman with the metal claws for hands and blades for feet, apropos of absolutely, completely nothing.

Everything simply stops, right then and there. As if the world had suddenly been frozen in time.

There is nothing to hear in the kitchen except for Midori's breathing, and Souji's surprised, nasally laughter.

"M-my tongue, Murderface?" Kharn looks back up at you, in an expression curiously similar to Midori's own, earlier. "I-I, ah, I do not know what you are saying. It is...it is normal, like yours, yes? J-just a bit longer than average, c-certainly nothing to get excited about--" She turns toward Souji, still covering her mouth with a hand.

A bit longer than average? Who was she trying to kid? It looked longer than your damn forearm!

It's a reference to Gen Urobuchi, the writer of Madoka Magica, which this quest is based off. Madoka Magica is one of his lighter series (imagine his other ones!), and therefore it is 'healing' for him.

People thought he was going to make Madoka a more lighthearted experience. That's what he said, at least. This theory was supported when it turned out the character designer would be Aoki Ume.
Then he remembered 'fuck this shit, I'm Gen Urobuchi!' and beheaded Mami, witchified Sayaka, murder-suicided Kyouko, killed Madoka multiple times, witchified and killed Sayaka again, killed Kyouko again, killed Mami again and killed Sayaka again.

It makes sense in context.

You decide to let up on the issue. As entertaining as it is to behold someone like Kharn squirm in obvious embarrasment and social discomfort, even you can see that she's suffered quite enough. You'll just ask about her tongue some other time, probably when there's no one else around but the both of you. A private exhibition of what it can do, perhaps. See if she can double-knot a cherry stem, or something.

In any case, you break off from the subject of Kharn's tongue for the time being, and ask her about the base, and the Incubator that owns it. She seems to be grateful enough to respond gamely, despite being quite self-conscious with how she replies (and covering her mouth still while talking, nudging Souji ever so often to append supporting data to her answers).

What you learn is decidedly vague, but enough: it's a heavily-fortified base with enough firepower to take over a small country; it has a total of a hundred subterranean levels, sixty of which is only accessible by her and Souji; if something were to happen that would force the base to lock down, anyone trapped inside would be able to survive for at least three years with the supplies available; and if all really goes to pot, there are various emergency countermeasures that could probably save the day but definitely not worth going into detail because they were all horribly classified.

As for the Incubator, well, it just so happens that Kharn has a picture of him in her smartphone. She shows it to you - and you blink at the image of a rather docile-looking animal, covered in white fur, seemingly dozing rather contentedly on Kharn's lap. While you've never seen a cat with such long, floppy ears and such a bushy tail - the smug expression on its face definitely resembles a feline one, to you it looks decidedly too smug for comfort.

You'd call it cute, really, but it's just way too damn smug.

"This is way back, before I left Japan and settled down here," Kharn murmurs, the slightest note of wistful tenderness in her voice as she magnifies the photo for you with a tap of her claw on the screen. "He is our Incubator, and while we have disagreed on many things and fought over much more, he...is not so bad, compared to the rest of his kin." She smiles. "I think, out of all of them, he is the kindest."

That mutant cat? Kind?

"He could have had me destroyed, after all," She says, after closing the image. "Instead, I am here, still of use to the Officio despite...current circumstances." Kharn laughs, slightly. "You, of course, ah, you did not like him very much. Very first time you met him, BANG! You splattered him all over Sayaka. She looked like she had very nasty accident with can of whipped cream. She could not get him out of her hair for days!"

That's...well. You're not sure what to think about that. You should probably apologize to this Sayaka person, whoever she is.

"Ahaha! You, Murderface, apologize to Sayaka? That will be the day!"

Sayaka. Kyoko. Eversors.

"Mmm, well, do not look so discouraged, Murderface. I am sure this is permanent, this memory loss. It will all come rushing back to you soon enough." Kharn seems to have gotten over the embarrassment earlier, and pats your shoulder comfortingly with her clawed hand, each pat sounding like a drawer of knives being given a good shaking.

"Why don't we follow the itinerary as planned, now? We have your training to see to! A good opportunity to work out some frustration and anger, and a nice way to get the blood going, eh?" She grins at you, this time, and you have the sneaking suspicion that she might just use this opportunity for some well-deserved payback.

Midori nods at this. "Y-yes, I'd say it's a good idea, sempai. Exercise always helps recenter the mind or body, o-or something like that, I saw it on TV once..."

Training, huh?

You look down at your nearly-depleted stack of pancakes, before accepting. Training does sound like a good idea, come to think of it. In fact, you actually feel a bit eager about the entire thing, thirsting to get into a nice, violent scrap with anyone up to the task. As it is, you can't be in better shape - you've just had a hearty breakfast; your mood's surprisingly good despite waking up with no idea of who you are or what you're doing here; and you feel revitalized, refreshed even. Whatever the procedure was, it certainly feels like it's worked. Going nineteen rounds with a mutant alligator would be a piece of cake for you, right now.

Kharn's smile could not be wide enough at this, and she turns towards Souji expectantly. The young man grumbles and taps a few keys. "Yeah, yeah, I'll have the training room ready, just like you asked." A moment. "Are you sure about this? I mean, if she can't remember anything, maybe we should lay off having them there--"

"Now you are worrying too much. They must be there, ready for her use." Kharn pushes her seat back and rises from the table. "They are why she is here! She is to be trained with them!" She seems to pause as Souji looks back at her, before sighing and pinching his cheek, gently.

"Oh, do not look at me like that, lecher. Have trust in your procedure. It will hold, and Murderface will remain as herself." Kharn glances at you, before smiling as she gestures towards your direction with a clawed hand. "Well, what is left of her, anyway. Now, go on. Lead them there, I will follow in a little while. I have to get changed."

"...Right." Another sigh, and Souji clamps his laptop shut as he rises from his own seat - Kharn waving at you and Midori both, in a rather giddy fashion, before making her way out of the kitchen in a motion best described as 'skipping', leaving sparks in her wake.

Someone's excited, obviously.

You turn to the suddenly-crestfallen young man as he makes a half-hearted attempt to pile the plates into the sink, which Midori quickly assists with.

You can't help but wonder just what took place, there, even if you have a slight inkling of just what.

"She gets like this when we have company over," The young man volunteers after a rudimentary post-breakfast cleanup is made, and all three of you have stepped into the elevator. "It's been a bit hard for her to adjust to this kind of routine - doing science stuff, writing it down, doing some more science stuff, writing it down some more."

The elevator doors clang shut in front of you, and it lurches as it starts the journey deeper into the facility. "She trains by herself three hours a day, without fail, but she misses the..." he makes a face. "...danger of live combat, or what I've heard her call it."

Souji shrugs. "Anyway, I'd take it as another personal favor if you try not to get too carried away with her. She tends to get carried away a lot." Another shrug. "Eversors, you know?"

Midori, having divested her apron, is sticking close to you, but thankfully not that close. "I'm sure Miss Valnikov will be able to control herself, Souji-san. I don't think she'd ever willingly hurt Matsuda-sempai." The green-haired girl says as the elevator comes to a stop, the doors opening to reveal a rather...plain, if battered-looking training hall.

It is less hall and more of a vast room, the floors, walls and ceiling grated, riveted steel, with a pathetic white canvas mat at the very center of it. Not a single inch the ceiling and the walls is not scored with either claw, sword orburn marks (or an assortment of all three) and there is the faint scent of blood in the air. Just a hint of it, not enough to point out, but definitely there. Giving the entire place a definite mood of...well, cruelty and barbarity, if the person that regularly used it wasn't enough of a hint.

"It's not Murderface I'm worried about." Souji snaps as he takes out a smartphone from the pockets of his labcoat. He taps at the screen impatiently, and it's with a grind of heavy machinery that the walls of the training hall seem to turn, twist and move - revealing racks of rather brutishly-forged swords and knives designed for...well, people like Kharn. "It's Kharn. She's..." He looks at you, frowning. "...not the type to back down from a fight, especially if she thinks she's met someone better than her." It's then that he smirks. "I'm not saying you are, but just on the off-chance..."

Another tap of his smartphone, and one last rack unfolds itself right from the ceiling, lowered down to the center of the mat by hissing hydraulics. You have yet to step forward to take a closer look, but even without squinting through your glasses, you know that the weapons stored there are not your typical ones.

It's not as if it's any mystery to anyone who'd see them. They're made out of gold. That's already a dead giveaway.

You're just not sure why you think that it's a bad idea to be in the same room with them to begin with.

The elevator doors make their grinding noise yet again, and clanking footsteps make their way towards you. It's Kharn, obviously, and you turn to greet her.

She is wearing nothing but a sports bra and very tight cycling shorts. Spats, that's what they're called. Or you think. You're not too sure. What you're sure about is that your host is quite clearly eager about your training, and her attire is making you feel rather overdressed about the entire thing.

Oh, and she's tied her long hair back into a ponytail. There's that, too.

"Ahh, everything is ready!" Kharn crows, clapping both her clawed hands. "Ah, and so quickly, too! It is record time, I think, eh, Souji?"

"Just try not to burn the entire place down again, Kharn, that's all I'm asking." Souji shakes his head, seemingly studiously ignoring the lightly-attired woman. He gives the screen of his smartphone a couple more taps, before shoving the device into the pocket of his labcoat. "Right. You've got administrator access to everything in the training room for the duration. Anybody gets hurt or you need assistance, you know what to do." He nods towards you, before pushing past Kharn - making his way towards the elevator "Now, if you'll excuse me, I've got real work to do."

"A-ah, okay." Kharn seems a bit stunned at this, but takes it in stride. "Oh, please check on Misaka, make sure she eats breakfast!"

All three of you look back at him as the elevator brings him back up the living quarters.

Wow. You can see where he's coming from, but...does he really need to act like such a dick, sometimes?

That's...well. That certainly explains things a bit more.

Before it comes up in earnest, I want to point out, it seems like the previous owners of weapons remain in them, a little bit. Kirika is still in the sword. We might actually get to see more of Ahriman or the magical girl that owned the gloves in the first place if we choose those. And we might see more Malal if we pick the chainaxes.

Just sayin'.

Also let's not start making preemptive votes, huh? They'll be tougher to count later.

Muscle memory isn't a magical force but it is different than your normal memory

The reason it is called muscle memory is that it literally is something you can do without even thinking of it, there are people with dementia for example who can play musical instruments perfectly but not tell you a thing about how they learned to, that is muscle memory vs normal memory

"Souji's dreams?" Kharn seems a bit stunned by your question, as if deflating slightly at the loss of momentum. "Well, er, I suppose he is not here to hear us, he did make me promise not to tell you anything, but..." It's then that she smiles. "Ah, I know it seems like I am living up to my title, but I think he is just being paranoid, really. Maybe it is those anime he watches at night, the sort he argues over the internet about? Something like that, you know. Should not be taken seriously!"

You ask about them, nonetheless, and after a few weird looks, Kharn finally relents. What she tells you paints a rather...surprising picture: Kharn somehow goes berserk and attacks Misaka, wounding her grievously despite Midori's best efforts (and gets murdered for her trouble as well, making the green-haired girl wince beside you). You and the awesome robot from earlier try to fight Kharn off while Souji tries to resuscitate his sister, but Misaka dies from blood loss before anything else could be done. The robot gives its life to save you from a blow that would've sheared your head off your shoulders, his noble sacrifice netting you enough of an opening to send a well-placed shot into Kharn's Soul Gem.

"It was much more boring when he told it, of course," Kharn frowns at both you and Midori. "Anyway, it is all very dramatic and everything, I know, but who takes stock in dreams nowadays, eh? It is nothing! It is like, dreaming about teeth falling out and thinking that you will die in a fortnight! Only grandpas and old ladies believe that!"

Any other day, you'd agree, but it does sound a bit too specific. Still, it could probably just be Souji's imagination, fed by late-night anime and a boring desk job. You turn to Midori, asking her what she made of it. She merely shrugs, although you can see that hearing Kharn's account had disturbed her a bit.

"W-well, it's not the first time I've heard about dreams like that. I mean, dreams involving someone dying, and so on, sempai," Midori replies. "They usually turn out to be nothing, even if they seem to be realistic at first. I'd know, I kinda specialize in them a bit." She smiles to herself, slightly.

Well. Something to ask her about later. But in any case, it really doesn't sound like anything you'd worry about. You just met these people, after all, and they seemed to have it together. Something like that happening...it's much too far-fetched, a remote possibility. This isn't some damn third-rate anime drama after all. Dreams being prophetic is all just one big load.

You look to Kharn and tell her that you want to get on with the training. The three of you can worry about her boyfriend's fantasies later. Or maybe just her, really. You're not interested.

"M-Murderface! We are only colleagues!" The ponytailed russian protests as she follows you onto the mat, her bladed feet making muffled noises on the canvas. Midori stays well out of it, standing by the elevator, waving you with a murmured good luck as you leave her behind. Her smartphone in her hand, aimed at your retreating back.

She should learn to lie better, if she's going to keep up the pretense. It's not like you were born yesterday.

...Well, you woke up today with no memory of anything prior to your nap, so you may as well have been born today. But that's not the point.

"...Murderface, sometimes, you frustrate me," Kharn groans, but she gives you a resigned smile. "Fine. Maybe I will tell you about it, someday. But yes, we have..." She makes a cyclical gesture with a clawed hand, a strangely delicate movement that you can't help but admire. "...an understanding. For what it is worth, I am not as lonely as I was before."

"...I think I like you more now, Murderface, now that you are a blank slate. Well, Of course, I love the one I served with, but I hope you will not lose this when you remember everything again, eh?" She flashes you a rather cheeky grin, before gesturing to the racks of weapons around you. "Ah, now, enough talk! Let us begin your training! I think a warmup will do for now!" She points towards a rack close to you. "Pick something from there, Murderface. We shall take it slow, I think."

"Idiot." Kharn huffs at you. "They are training instruments. Stop fooling around!"

[]Take the wooden staff.
[]Take the baseball bat.
[]Refuse, go for the golden weapons directly. There is no 'taking it slow' with you.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and that's pretty much all that you can remember - well, besides the rather strange memory of a pink-haired girl tearing your heart out of your chest. Even stranger is the fact that while you should feel horror with that kind of memory - it certainly looked quite real, real enough that you felt a slight twinge of pain whenever it came to mind - all you feel is relief. A peaceful kind of relief, the kind someone would normally get when they found out that they've been saved at the last minute. Saved from making the biggest mistake of their life.

You should probably be worried about that. Just like you should be worried about how you don't even know anything about the people you're now having breakfast with, or where you're having breakfast at the moment. They seemed nice enough, that's for sure, and you have the strangest feeling that you're someone important to them. The one with the weird hands and legs seemed to imply such. The one with the green hair seemed to REALLY imply such - you're not so stupid as to miss why the pancake at the bottom of your pile was cut carefully and fastidiously in the shape of a heart.

>>21606507

You didn't say anything about that, though. You just tore it apart and devoured it as you did the rest, before clinking your fork against the plate and asking for seconds. The girl nearly toppled over from her seat in her attempt to get up quickly enough from the table, earning a gentle admonition from the freak with claws and a derisive snort from her boyfriend.

There's a bit of a mood around the kitchen, and you guess that it's because of that question you posed just a little while ago. Both Kharn and Midori - you think that's what their names are - had stared at you for a long moment, before looking down on their plates. Neither of them seemingly eager to answer the question. You resumed eating a few moments after that - you still wanted to know, of course, but you didn't want your breakfast to get cold. Maybe you'll save it for another time, another place. The mood was awkward enough as it is.

As you wait for your second pile of pancakes, something falls out of your inventory, hitting your leg on the way down to the floor. You blink at this, and reach down to pick it up. It seems to be a book of sorts. An illustrated novel, competently drawn, too.

"A-ah, sempai, that's--" You hear Midori freeze in her tracks as you lift the book clear from underneath the table.

"Nothing, sempai! E-everything's alright!" She says after a moment, beaming, as she replaces your empty plate with one bearing your second helping. "T-that book, though, um..."

"It's...uh, how do I say this..." You watch Midori wring her hands as she glances at you, at the book, then back again at you, seemingly fumbling for a way to express herself. She vaguely resembles a child trying weigh her options, limited as they were: lie now and risk punishment upon discovery later, or come clean and get the spanking over with.

You glance down at the cover as you wait for her to finish gathering her thoughts, examining it in full detail. Seems like that sort of manga girls buy - the ones with the all-too-large sparkly eyes, dainty physiques and meticulously-drawn flowers adorning every page. The title, The Adventures of Miracle Midori and Murder Mayumi, doesn't give away much of the book's subject matter - but the two girls embracing rather closely just behind the title script does.

"A-ah, ah, um--" You turn towads Midori, and she's going quite red in the face, sweat dotting her brow. "I-it's just a small hobby of mine, s-sempai, i-it's a self-publishing deal, n-not realy all that big to begin with--"

...Oh. So she draws manga in her spare time? That's...that's actually impressive. You haven't really peeked at the pages inside, but judging by the cover alone, this seems to be quite the labor of love. She seems to be really bothered about you holding it, though, and while you're taking a rather perverse joy out of seeing her squirm there, with spaghetti inside her pockets.

"Murderface," Kharn clicks her tongue at you in slight admonishment. "Do not be like that. Give the poor girl her book back."

"Well, um, Miss Kharn, technically it's not mine..." Midori smiles nervously at the raven-haired woman, all while reaching for the book in your hands. You blink at this, pulling the volume away slowly. "B-but, I should probably keep it, just in case...n-no, sempai, let me just take care of it--"

"It's mine," The young man, who'd been furiously typing from behind his laptop, suddenly snaps, and the book is rudely torn from your grasp. "Sorry. I lent it to you earlier, before your procedure. Something for you to read while we got the equipment warmed up." He nods at Midori, while all three of you blink at him - Kharn especially. "Sorry about that, Hanegawa. Didn't mean to make it look like I'm being careless with your work. I'm a big fan."

"O-oh, that's..." Midori seems to be rather stunned at the turn of events, before working up a smile. "E-er, n-no, that's fine, Souji-san. I was just wondering how it got here, that's all. I...I didn't know they delivered all the way here to Siberia."

Strange bunch, these people. All this fuss for a girly manga. You shake your head, and make to work on those pancakes when you stop for a moment, Midori's shaky reply finally sinking in. You look up at all three of them in turn.

...Siberia? That's where you are, right now?

"Ah, yes, Siberia," Kharn nods after a moment, a small, guilty smile on her face. "Just a few miles off from Petropavlovsk-Kamchatsky. Is heavily-fortified subterrenean base, built for Research and Development. Something the Incubator handed over to this girly comics-reading pervert--" She elbows Souji sharply in the side, causing the latter to grunt quietly in pain. "--to develop new toys for the Officio's Magical Girls to use. That includes you, Murderface."

"At the end of the day, all Magical Girls are weapons." She licks at the tip of her fork, accidentally giving you a flash of her..well, remarkably-long tongue. You can't help but stare. "All of us are. The Incubator just rents us out once in a while."

So that's why it felt weird. Of course, you inferred from the rather long elevator ride earlier that you were somewhat underground, and the way this entire floor was made to look like the insides of an apartment did help calm you some - but even then, you felt strangely...imprisoned, somehow. A nagging, needling urge that told you that you shouldn't be here, that you should be above ground. An irrational sensation of claustrophobia, of being...well, buried alive. Horribly morbid, but it was there.

You try to ignore it by shoving another forkful of syrup-coated pancake into your mouth.

Christ, Kharn's got a long tongue. Where'd she get that? Do all Russian girls have tongues like that, or something? Did she get it done? What?

What do you do, now?

You have some questions in your head that you'd probably be a whole lot better off asking. Something about the base, for example - something in Kharn's explanation could probably trigger something inside your head, jar your gray matter hard enough that you'd remember something else other than a girl with pink hair killing you Aztec-style. Asking about the Incubator seems like a good idea too - after all, it sounds like he's the one responsible for the entire operation, and while you can't exactly process it, it seems like you've heard of that term before. Either of the two could've been a better option, really, and you do want to stop being the last to be picked up by the Clue Train, here.

But of course you don't pick those options. Not when there's something much more important to ask about, here. Something that needs to be asked about right away, and not a moment sooner.

"What the fuck is up with your tongue?" You hear yourself ask the woman with the metal claws for hands and blades for feet, apropos of absolutely, completely nothing.

Everything simply stops, right then and there. As if the world had suddenly been frozen in time.

Except for Kharn. Her face, normally pale as it is, quickly goes from its usual milky white to a rather interesting shade of red. Her blank, stunned face slowly twisting to one of frank, mortified embarrassment. She lowers her face, slightly, one brutally-clawed hand quickly coming up to cover her mouth.

There is nothing to hear in the kitchen except for Midori's breathing, and Souji's surprised, nasally laughter.

"M-my tongue, Murderface?" Kharn looks back up at you, in an expression curiously similar to Midori's own, earlier. "I-I, ah, I do not know what you are saying. It is...it is normal, like yours, yes? J-just a bit longer than average, c-certainly nothing to get excited about--" She turns toward Souji, still covering her mouth with a hand.

A bit longer than average? Who was she trying to kid? It looked longer than your damn forearm!

People thought he was going to make Madoka a more lighthearted experience. That's what he said, at least. This theory was supported when it turned out the character designer would be Aoki Ume.
Then he remembered 'fuck this shit, I'm Gen Urobuchi!' and beheaded Mami, witchified Sayaka, murder-suicided Kyouko, killed Madoka multiple times, witchified and killed Sayaka again, killed Kyouko again, killed Mami again and killed Sayaka again.

You decide to let up on the issue. As entertaining as it is to behold someone like Kharn squirm in obvious embarrasment and social discomfort, even you can see that she's suffered quite enough. You'll just ask about her tongue some other time, probably when there's no one else around but the both of you. A private exhibition of what it can do, perhaps. See if she can double-knot a cherry stem, or something.

In any case, you break off from the subject of Kharn's tongue for the time being, and ask her about the base, and the Incubator that owns it. She seems to be grateful enough to respond gamely, despite being quite self-conscious with how she replies (and covering her mouth still while talking, nudging Souji ever so often to append supporting data to her answers).

What you learn is decidedly vague, but enough: it's a heavily-fortified base with enough firepower to take over a small country; it has a total of a hundred subterranean levels, sixty of which is only accessible by her and Souji; if something were to happen that would force the base to lock down, anyone trapped inside would be able to survive for at least three years with the supplies available; and if all really goes to pot, there are various emergency countermeasures that could probably save the day but definitely not worth going into detail because they were all horribly classified.

As for the Incubator, well, it just so happens that Kharn has a picture of him in her smartphone. She shows it to you - and you blink at the image of a rather docile-looking animal, covered in white fur, seemingly dozing rather contentedly on Kharn's lap. While you've never seen a cat with such long, floppy ears and such a bushy tail - the smug expression on its face definitely resembles a feline one, to you it looks decidedly too smug for comfort.

You'd call it cute, really, but it's just way too damn smug.

"This is way back, before I left Japan and settled down here," Kharn murmurs, the slightest note of wistful tenderness in her voice as she magnifies the photo for you with a tap of her claw on the screen. "He is our Incubator, and while we have disagreed on many things and fought over much more, he...is not so bad, compared to the rest of his kin." She smiles. "I think, out of all of them, he is the kindest."

That mutant cat? Kind?

"He could have had me destroyed, after all," She says, after closing the image. "Instead, I am here, still of use to the Officio despite...current circumstances." Kharn laughs, slightly. "You, of course, ah, you did not like him very much. Very first time you met him, BANG! You splattered him all over Sayaka. She looked like she had very nasty accident with can of whipped cream. She could not get him out of her hair for days!"

That's...well. You're not sure what to think about that. You should probably apologize to this Sayaka person, whoever she is.

"Ahaha! You, Murderface, apologize to Sayaka? That will be the day!"

Sayaka. Kyoko. Eversors.

"Mmm, well, do not look so discouraged, Murderface. I am sure this is permanent, this memory loss. It will all come rushing back to you soon enough." Kharn seems to have gotten over the embarrassment earlier, and pats your shoulder comfortingly with her clawed hand, each pat sounding like a drawer of knives being given a good shaking.

"Why don't we follow the itinerary as planned, now? We have your training to see to! A good opportunity to work out some frustration and anger, and a nice way to get the blood going, eh?" She grins at you, this time, and you have the sneaking suspicion that she might just use this opportunity for some well-deserved payback.

Midori nods at this. "Y-yes, I'd say it's a good idea, sempai. Exercise always helps recenter the mind or body, o-or something like that, I saw it on TV once..."

You look down at your nearly-depleted stack of pancakes, before accepting. Training does sound like a good idea, come to think of it. In fact, you actually feel a bit eager about the entire thing, thirsting to get into a nice, violent scrap with anyone up to the task. As it is, you can't be in better shape - you've just had a hearty breakfast; your mood's surprisingly good despite waking up with no idea of who you are or what you're doing here; and you feel revitalized, refreshed even. Whatever the procedure was, it certainly feels like it's worked. Going nineteen rounds with a mutant alligator would be a piece of cake for you, right now.

Kharn's smile could not be wide enough at this, and she turns towards Souji expectantly. The young man grumbles and taps a few keys. "Yeah, yeah, I'll have the training room ready, just like you asked." A moment. "Are you sure about this? I mean, if she can't remember anything, maybe we should lay off having them there--"

"Now you are worrying too much. They must be there, ready for her use." Kharn pushes her seat back and rises from the table. "They are why she is here! She is to be trained with them!" She seems to pause as Souji looks back at her, before sighing and pinching his cheek, gently.

"Oh, do not look at me like that, lecher. Have trust in your procedure. It will hold, and Murderface will remain as herself." Kharn glances at you, before smiling as she gestures towards your direction with a clawed hand. "Well, what is left of her, anyway. Now, go on. Lead them there, I will follow in a little while. I have to get changed."

"...Right." Another sigh, and Souji clamps his laptop shut as he rises from his own seat - Kharn waving at you and Midori both, in a rather giddy fashion, before making her way out of the kitchen in a motion best described as 'skipping', leaving sparks in her wake.

Someone's excited, obviously.

You turn to the suddenly-crestfallen young man as he makes a half-hearted attempt to pile the plates into the sink, which Midori quickly assists with.

You can't help but wonder just what took place, there, even if you have a slight inkling of just what.

"She gets like this when we have company over," The young man volunteers after a rudimentary post-breakfast cleanup is made, and all three of you have stepped into the elevator. "It's been a bit hard for her to adjust to this kind of routine - doing science stuff, writing it down, doing some more science stuff, writing it down some more."

The elevator doors clang shut in front of you, and it lurches as it starts the journey deeper into the facility. "She trains by herself three hours a day, without fail, but she misses the..." he makes a face. "...danger of live combat, or what I've heard her call it."

Souji shrugs. "Anyway, I'd take it as another personal favor if you try not to get too carried away with her. She tends to get carried away a lot." Another shrug. "Eversors, you know?"

Midori, having divested her apron, is sticking close to you, but thankfully not that close. "I'm sure Miss Valnikov will be able to control herself, Souji-san. I don't think she'd ever willingly hurt Matsuda-sempai." The green-haired girl says as the elevator comes to a stop, the doors opening to reveal a rather...plain, if battered-looking training hall.

It is less hall and more of a vast room, the floors, walls and ceiling grated, riveted steel, with a pathetic white canvas mat at the very center of it. Not a single inch the ceiling and the walls is not scored with either claw, sword orburn marks (or an assortment of all three) and there is the faint scent of blood in the air. Just a hint of it, not enough to point out, but definitely there. Giving the entire place a definite mood of...well, cruelty and barbarity, if the person that regularly used it wasn't enough of a hint.

"It's not Murderface I'm worried about." Souji snaps as he takes out a smartphone from the pockets of his labcoat. He taps at the screen impatiently, and it's with a grind of heavy machinery that the walls of the training hall seem to turn, twist and move - revealing racks of rather brutishly-forged swords and knives designed for...well, people like Kharn. "It's Kharn. She's..." He looks at you, frowning. "...not the type to back down from a fight, especially if she thinks she's met someone better than her." It's then that he smirks. "I'm not saying you are, but just on the off-chance..."

Another tap of his smartphone, and one last rack unfolds itself right from the ceiling, lowered down to the center of the mat by hissing hydraulics. You have yet to step forward to take a closer look, but even without squinting through your glasses, you know that the weapons stored there are not your typical ones.

It's not as if it's any mystery to anyone who'd see them. They're made out of gold. That's already a dead giveaway.

You're just not sure why you think that it's a bad idea to be in the same room with them to begin with.

The elevator doors make their grinding noise yet again, and clanking footsteps make their way towards you. It's Kharn, obviously, and you turn to greet her.

She is wearing nothing but a sports bra and very tight cycling shorts. Spats, that's what they're called. Or you think. You're not too sure. What you're sure about is that your host is quite clearly eager about your training, and her attire is making you feel rather overdressed about the entire thing.

Oh, and she's tied her long hair back into a ponytail. There's that, too.

"Ahh, everything is ready!" Kharn crows, clapping both her clawed hands. "Ah, and so quickly, too! It is record time, I think, eh, Souji?"

"Just try not to burn the entire place down again, Kharn, that's all I'm asking." Souji shakes his head, seemingly studiously ignoring the lightly-attired woman. He gives the screen of his smartphone a couple more taps, before shoving the device into the pocket of his labcoat. "Right. You've got administrator access to everything in the training room for the duration. Anybody gets hurt or you need assistance, you know what to do." He nods towards you, before pushing past Kharn - making his way towards the elevator "Now, if you'll excuse me, I've got real work to do."

"A-ah, okay." Kharn seems a bit stunned at this, but takes it in stride. "Oh, please check on Misaka, make sure she eats breakfast!"

All three of you look back at him as the elevator brings him back up the living quarters.

Wow. You can see where he's coming from, but...does he really need to act like such a dick, sometimes?

We might actually get to see more of Ahriman or the magical girl that owned the gloves in the first place if we choose those. And we might see more Malal if we pick the chainaxes.

Just sayin'.

Muscle memory isn't a magical force but it is different than your normal memory

The reason it is called muscle memory is that it literally is something you can do without even thinking of it, there are people with dementia for example who can play musical instruments perfectly but not tell you a thing about how they learned to, that is muscle memory vs normal memory

"Souji's dreams?" Kharn seems a bit stunned by your question, as if deflating slightly at the loss of momentum. "Well, er, I suppose he is not here to hear us, he did make me promise not to tell you anything, but..." It's then that she smiles. "Ah, I know it seems like I am living up to my title, but I think he is just being paranoid, really. Maybe it is those anime he watches at night, the sort he argues over the internet about? Something like that, you know. Should not be taken seriously!"

You ask about them, nonetheless, and after a few weird looks, Kharn finally relents. What she tells you paints a rather...surprising picture: Kharn somehow goes berserk and attacks Misaka, wounding her grievously despite Midori's best efforts (and gets murdered for her trouble as well, making the green-haired girl wince beside you). You and the awesome robot from earlier try to fight Kharn off while Souji tries to resuscitate his sister, but Misaka dies from blood loss before anything else could be done. The robot gives its life to save you from a blow that would've sheared your head off your shoulders, his noble sacrifice netting you enough of an opening to send a well-placed shot into Kharn's Soul Gem.

"It was much more boring when he told it, of course," Kharn frowns at both you and Midori. "Anyway, it is all very dramatic and everything, I know, but who takes stock in dreams nowadays, eh? It is nothing! It is like, dreaming about teeth falling out and thinking that you will die in a fortnight! Only grandpas and old ladies believe that!"

Any other day, you'd agree, but it does sound a bit too specific. Still, it could probably just be Souji's imagination, fed by late-night anime and a boring desk job. You turn to Midori, asking her what she made of it. She merely shrugs, although you can see that hearing Kharn's account had disturbed her a bit.

"W-well, it's not the first time I've heard about dreams like that. I mean, dreams involving someone dying, and so on, sempai," Midori replies. "They usually turn out to be nothing, even if they seem to be realistic at first. I'd know, I kinda specialize in them a bit." She smiles to herself, slightly.

Well. Something to ask her about later. But in any case, it really doesn't sound like anything you'd worry about. You just met these people, after all, and they seemed to have it together. Something like that happening...it's much too far-fetched, a remote possibility. This isn't some damn third-rate anime drama after all. Dreams being prophetic is all just one big load.

You look to Kharn and tell her that you want to get on with the training. The three of you can worry about her boyfriend's fantasies later. Or maybe just her, really. You're not interested.

"M-Murderface! We are only colleagues!" The ponytailed russian protests as she follows you onto the mat, her bladed feet making muffled noises on the canvas. Midori stays well out of it, standing by the elevator, waving you with a murmured good luck as you leave her behind. Her smartphone in her hand, aimed at your retreating back.

She should learn to lie better, if she's going to keep up the pretense. It's not like you were born yesterday.

...Well, you woke up today with no memory of anything prior to your nap, so you may as well have been born today. But that's not the point.

"...Murderface, sometimes, you frustrate me," Kharn groans, but she gives you a resigned smile. "Fine. Maybe I will tell you about it, someday. But yes, we have..." She makes a cyclical gesture with a clawed hand, a strangely delicate movement that you can't help but admire. "...an understanding. For what it is worth, I am not as lonely as I was before."

You nod at Kharn, and offer her your congratulations. She blushes quite a bit, before accepting them with a nod of her own.

"...I think I like you more now, Murderface, now that you are a blank slate. Well, Of course, I love the one I served with, but I hope you will not lose this when you remember everything again, eh?" She flashes you a rather cheeky grin, before gesturing to the racks of weapons around you. "Ah, now, enough talk! Let us begin your training! I think a warmup will do for now!" She points towards a rack close to you. "Pick something from there, Murderface. We shall take it slow, I think."

"Idiot." Kharn huffs at you. "They are training instruments. Stop fooling around!"

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 11/18/12(Sun)07:17 No.21635951

You are a Magical Girl, and you've woken up with amnesia. The kind third-rate soap opera writers and no-talent hacks use as a cheap plot device to drum up some mystery in the poorly written-schlock they laboriously pull out of their asses.

It's alright, though. You're not that bothered about it. In fact, you're not bothered at all, to be honest. Sure, it's a bit disturbing, but it's not like you'll remember things eventually. One day at a time, no reason to try and pick up the pieces so quickly. Whatever kind of baggage that you had to deal with in the past, you're in no hurry to pick them all back up. Besides, you're in Siberia, about to go into a training round with someone who's got knives for hands and blades for feet.

Yeah, you can take it easy for a bit, you think.

Even without them reminding you, you could guess that your past self wasn't very nice company.

You still can't get over your voice, at that. It's got a distinct rough edge to it, a complete opposite of your image in the mirror. Every word sounds like it's being snarled, or on the edge of being growled. As if you're always angry, all the time.

What have you been doing to yourself?

>>21635951

Well, no time to dwell about your former habits. You give the rack in front of you a cursory glance, before reaching in and pulling out a wooden bat. It's a bit on the used side, but it's nice and heavy. Balanced. It'd be perfect if had some decent spikes and nails on the business end, maybe some barbed wire wrap-around - but you can't have everything, you suppose.

You turn around, and see that Kharn had already chosen her own weapon. In fact, she's already putting herself through the paces with it.

A staff. One and a half meters of lacquered wood, the many dents and scratches on the surface betraying just how much it's been used. And even with her claws, long, oversized and clawed they were - the dark-haired woman looked quite at home with the harmless-looking implement. Spinning it, twirling it, making it dance in her grasp in graceful, martial movements.

You find yourself entranced by the display. Enchanted, almost. It was one thing to see her go about in a mundane fashion with her obvious eccentricities, but to see her now, moving through rudimentary stances and forms, obviously in her own element...

You swallow the painful truth with a dry throat. This is going to hurt. This is going to hurt bad.

Kharn finishes her warm-up with a flourish, and she turns to look at you, barely even breathing hard. Hell, you don't think she even broke a sweat with that, even if she'd been spinning the staff fast enough that it blurred.

"Murderface, have you picked your weapon already?" She notices the bat in your hand, and her face lights up.

"Ahaha, vintage Murderface! You have always been partial with that, even though you detest the sport it is used in." Kharn grins at you. "Well, would you like to begin now, or do you want to make it more interesting?"

Interesting how? Right now you're just interested in keeping all your limbs intact for the duration of the session, since you have the sneaking suspicion you'll be needing them after this.

"Ah, with a bet, you know. Stakes! Wagers! Who wins gets something from the loser! A bit of gambling to spice up the practice! If not, eh, it gets boring really quickly." Kharn explains, resting the staff on her shoulders. "It is customary here, you know, to bet something precious to you." Her grin grows wider, and for a moment you feel like a piece of meat being ogled by a ravenous predator.

How do you respond?

"Ah, yes, there is that, isn't it? Very unfortunate, Murderface's memory." If this put a crimp in whatever she's planning, Kharn didn't show it, merely smiling all the more. For a moment you're reminded of a great and ancient predator, skulking in the depths, baring its teeth as it corners its prey, preparing to feast on flesh spiced with adrenalin and fear. What you're trying to get at, here, is that your training partner is smiling wide enough for you to get goosebumps.

It's then that she steps towards you, crossing the distance between the both of you in two slow, loping strides. Each step making the plates of her metal legs clank together in sharp, yet muted cadence. "Then I will pick. And do not worry, it will not be something silly like your virginity or anything like that. And no, they will not involve other people." She nods towards Midori, a smirk on her face. "That is just in poor taste, I am thinking."

Well, that's fine, you tell her, as you give the bat a few practice swings, with one hand, then two. You were about to tell her not to bet Souji, because, you know, you're not that kind of girl.

"Yes, yes, of course." Kharn taps her lips with a clawed fingertip, seemingly deep in thought as she looks down at you - before smiling again. "Ah, I know. If Murderface wins, then I will give you that package that a mutual friend of ours has asked me to give you, before she passed away. She is Malal, and I spent much of yesterday telling you about her."

...Malal, huh? Well. Isn't it a bit unreasonable, to bet something that you were meant to be given in the first place?

Fair enough. What about her, then? What if she wins, as if that isn't already the forgone conclusion?

"If I win," Kharn seems to take quite the delight in drawing her words out, "...then you will owe me a favor. And it is a favor that, when I ask, you cannot refuse. You will carry it out, immediately, without fail."

She holds out her clawed hand to you.

"It is a deal, then, Murderface?"

That's not too bad, you figure. You reach for her hand, but squint up at her just before you touch her. Just to be clear, you grumble, she's not going to make you do anything silly or humiliating as a favor, right? Nothing incriminating or illegal or anything exciting like that?

Kharn blinks at this, as if surprised. "It is...strange of you to be so cautious and specify like that, Murderface, but I assure you, I will not make you do anything you would not do otherwise. This is just something to make sure that you do go through with it, to...ah, reassure myself that I can count on my very good friend when the time comes."

It's here that she smiles, not grinning with mischief, but rather a genuine, if awkward smile, as if trying to comfort you. "Come on, surely you trust me, eh?"

As far as you can throw her. But you don't voice that one out, instead narrowing your eyes at her instead, before giving her a small nod. You reach forward and clasp your fingers around her wrist instead of her fingers, and she does the same.

"The pact has been made, and let both parties honor it should fortune favor them." Kharn murmurs underneath her breath, and it's then that she cackles as you part, stepping back from each other, putting distance between the both of you.

Wonderful. You feel like you've just made a deal with the Devil.

You give the bat a couple more practice swings as you watch Kharn show off once more, staff whistling bluntly through the air as she gives it another casual twirl. It's then that she levels it at you like a spear, pointing the end at your throat, and then - almost dismissively - at your stomach.

"I will enjoy this, I will be honest." You glimpse her smiling again - but it is not a smile. It is more like a snarl, drawing lips back from perfect white teeth. "Hanegawa! If you please!"

Midori nearly drops her phone at that, but steps forward to the edge of the canvas mat, nodding. She looks at you, then at Kharn, and raises a hand.

"R-Ready...! Set...!"

All of a sudden, you feel like a car. A RACE car.

You decide to cheat.

You spring forward, pre-empting Midori's final cry that would start this battle. Clearly, you do not consider this little training exercise the friendly match that it is - you have to win, especially with the stakes involved. Survival was no longer the baseline objective, here - Kharn had made it quite obvious that this would not end without either of you getting your share of bruises. You don't particularly care about the package, either - whatever it was, you would eventually get it.

You're just not comfortable with giving Kharn that favor, even if she did do her best to reassure you.

That kind of promise isn't made without someone looking for a permanent way out.

You cross the distance between you and Kharn in mere moments, your full-out dash turning into a lunge at the final step - and you grit your teeth at her expression of mock surprise as you bring the bat down in a traitorous one-handed swing. Pinning your hopes on knocking the weapon out of her hands before she could step back to get you in range of the staff's striking ends. This close, she wouldn't be able to bring it to bear, much less defend herself--

The harsh clack of colliding wood sends a sharp jolt up your arm as Kharn easily parries it, her claws sliding across the wooden shaft with an almost unnatural smoothness. A cackle leaves her lips, loud and insulting, as she brings the other end in a blurring, vicious return stroke that you manage to duck under with pure stupid luck than anything else.

Cursing her name, her family and everything that she stood for, you step forward again and bring the bat into a wild two-handed swing that would've murdered any watermelon it might have crushed into - and this one Kharn jumps away from, getting a surprised gasp from her and giving you a moment to breathe.

You use that moment to tell yourself just how stupid everything is.

She attacks first, this time, her staff sizzling through the air, point first - you manage to sidestep the lightning-fast thrust, but not before it brushes across your side, briefly digging and reminding you of forgotten injuries. The unwelcome pain is enough to make your eyes water, but you comfort yourself in the fact that yes, this was part of your plan.

You step forward, right into the overextended stab - and trap the staff underneath your arm, cinching it to you like a couched lance. With her weapon caught and yours already whistling towards the side of her head, you manage to flash her a weak grin as you anticipate your victory.

The world suddenly spinning, end over end, the ground leaving your feet flailing and kicking, could not have been timed more hilariously to remind you that life is not fair. Having your own ruse being used against you, your own grip on your opponent's weapon used to lift you into the air and then slam you into back into the floor with a crushing, bone-jarring thud - could not have been more apt in reminding you that cheatyfaces never prosper, and girls with black steel knifey shit on their arms and legs always win to go home and fuck the prom queen.

Painfully trying to pull breath back into your lungs, you somehow manage to get your feet back under you, still dazed, still stunned. Still wondering what the fuck just hit you.

For what it was worth, you saw it coming.

A slap. Open-handed. A wide, flat palm of black metal, coming up from hip level to the corner of your jaw, slamming into your face with momentous force. Like it had been shot from a rifle. You did not even have time to blink before the room itself went completely white one moment, before going black the next. You feel yourself bounce off something hard, and fall on something harder.

A moment more, and the world finally snaps back into painful existence. The first thought that comes into your shock-blunted mind is wondering if you've lost your glasses, or lost all sensation from your face, as you can't feel anything there anymore. Well, besides the pain, of course. Can't forget that.

Flat on your back, you crack open one eye - and you catch a glimpse of Kharn smiling down at you, the end of the staff aimed at your throat.

"Almost decent," The clawed woman cackles, her voice muffled to your still-ringing ears. "Actually, no, that is very unfair. Very competent, Murderface. Treachery still comes easily to you, I love that! It reminds me of the old you, before all this amnesia nonsense!"

She pulls away the staff, and offers the hand she'd nearly torn your face off with. You manage to take it after the first few failed attempts in reaching at its double-images. With contemptuous ease does she pull you back up to your feet, and you catch a whiff of her unperfumed scent; reminiscent of fresh blood, almost tangy, with the earthy tone of sweat.

You take a moment to will everything to stop spinning - you'll be the last to admit it, but Kharn really rocked you there, and you doubt you'd be able to take more of that before passing out completely. You should have known she'd have some way of countering that, and your mistake only serves to anger you further.

Gritting your teeth against the pain - and brimming frustration - you force your eyes open just as you push Kharn away, roughly. You shove your glasses back on just as you growl to her that she should've knocked you out when she had the chance, to.

"Oh, come on, do not being so sore, Murderface! It is just first round!" Even without looking, you could hear the smile, the GRIN in Kharn's voice, and you hear her clanking footsteps as she follows your unsteady gait forward. "Do not be so mad! Maybe, sure, I could have let you down a bit more gently, but that is bigger insult to you if I did, I think." She clicks her tongue at you, as if trying to goad you on. "That is true, do not give me your lying silence. Now, come on, pick something else to try and kill me with!"

If she would just shut up for a second, then you'd be able to, you snap at her, before glancing around. The weapons in the racks you've approached...well, they certainly don't look practical. Most of them are hilariously oversized, built for someone nearly six feet tall and had a grip size that could choke a gorilla one-handedly. A bit more irritating is the fact that there doesn't seem to be any firearms around - of course, you wouldn't really use one in training like this, but the option would have been nice.

You turn around finally, shaking your head - the motion nearly making bile rise up your throat, Kharn's little slap haunting you still - and it's then that your gaze stops at the rack at the very center of the training hall. Four golden weapons, arrayed neatly.

Well, three weapons, really, now that you look at them a bit more closely, and a pair of golden fashion accessories.

A Desert Eagle, twin chainaxes(Kharn-sized, of course), an unsheathed katana, and...what looks to be twin bangles, the thick type that clasps loosely around your wrists. You've no idea what those do in particular.

All of them gold, and giving you quite the sense of foreboding.

"Ah, going immediately for them, eh?" Kharn comes up beside you, and you don't even have to turn to see that she's smiling, even now. "I cannot say I blame you. As garish and unpractical as they are, for people like us, they are the only choice, yes?" She reaches out with a clawed hand, and gently places it on the handle of one of the oversized chainaxes.

"I killed many people with this one, during my tenure as Warmaster. Witches, Magical Girls...everything." She looks down at the twin weapons with a wistful expression, almost longing, before withdrawing her hand. "Both of them are yours now, of course. Just as all the others are." The russian gestures to the gun, and the sword. "These I took from you during the procedure, if you will forgive me for taking the liberty to. I found them in your inventory, a strange thing. But it is always strange whenever these are involved."

It's then that she pats your shoulder, in an almost encouraging fashion. "Well, go on then, Murderface. Pick your weapon, and I will make sure that before this day ends, you will be able to kill many people with it." Kharn smiles, before blinking, and pointing to the bangles. "Oh, before I forget! Those bangles, they are not very useless, even though they look like so. They turn into, er, gauntlets, I think is the word. Very large ones, good for smashing things."

Well. That sounds handy.

Which one do you take from the rack?

Go for the bangles/gauntlets. This is supposed to be training session after all, and the hand to hand weapons are (as far as we know) more likely to render unconscious than kill.

I guess the katakana is also an option in that regard, as I double a blade would be able to get through Kharn's limbs.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you've woken up with amnesia. The kind third-rate soap opera writers and no-talent hacks use as a cheap plot device to drum up some mystery in the poorly written-schlock they laboriously pull out of their asses.

It's alright, though. You're not that bothered about it. In fact, you're not bothered at all, to be honest. Sure, it's a bit disturbing, but it's not like you'll remember things eventually. One day at a time, no reason to try and pick up the pieces so quickly. Whatever kind of baggage that you had to deal with in the past, you're in no hurry to pick them all back up. Besides, you're in Siberia, about to go into a training round with someone who's got knives for hands and blades for feet.

Yeah, you can take it easy for a bit, you think.

Even without them reminding you, you could guess that your past self wasn't very nice company.

You still can't get over your voice, at that. It's got a distinct rough edge to it, a complete opposite of your image in the mirror. Every word sounds like it's being snarled, or on the edge of being growled. As if you're always angry, all the time.

What have you been doing to yourself?

>>21635951

Well, no time to dwell about your former habits. You give the rack in front of you a cursory glance, before reaching in and pulling out a wooden bat. It's a bit on the used side, but it's nice and heavy. Balanced. It'd be perfect if had some decent spikes and nails on the business end, maybe some barbed wire wrap-around - but you can't have everything, you suppose.

You turn around, and see that Kharn had already chosen her own weapon. In fact, she's already putting herself through the paces with it.

A staff. One and a half meters of lacquered wood, the many dents and scratches on the surface betraying just how much it's been used. And even with her claws, long, oversized and clawed they were - the dark-haired woman looked quite at home with the harmless-looking implement. Spinning it, twirling it, making it dance in her grasp in graceful, martial movements.

You find yourself entranced by the display. Enchanted, almost. It was one thing to see her go about in a mundane fashion with her obvious eccentricities, but to see her now, moving through rudimentary stances and forms, obviously in her own element...

Kharn finishes her warm-up with a flourish, and she turns to look at you, barely even breathing hard. Hell, you don't think she even broke a sweat with that, even if she'd been spinning the staff fast enough that it blurred.

"Murderface, have you picked your weapon already?" She notices the bat in your hand, and her face lights up.

"Ahaha, vintage Murderface! You have always been partial with that, even though you detest the sport it is used in." Kharn grins at you. "Well, would you like to begin now, or do you want to make it more interesting?"

Interesting how? Right now you're just interested in keeping all your limbs intact for the duration of the session, since you have the sneaking suspicion you'll be needing them after this.

"Ah, with a bet, you know. Stakes! Wagers! Who wins gets something from the loser! A bit of gambling to spice up the practice! If not, eh, it gets boring really quickly." Kharn explains, resting the staff on her shoulders. "It is customary here, you know, to bet something precious to you." Her grin grows wider, and for a moment you feel like a piece of meat being ogled by a ravenous predator.

How do you respond?

"Ah, yes, there is that, isn't it? Very unfortunate, Murderface's memory." If this put a crimp in whatever she's planning, Kharn didn't show it, merely smiling all the more. For a moment you're reminded of a great and ancient predator, skulking in the depths, baring its teeth as it corners its prey, preparing to feast on flesh spiced with adrenalin and fear. What you're trying to get at, here, is that your training partner is smiling wide enough for you to get goosebumps.

It's then that she steps towards you, crossing the distance between the both of you in two slow, loping strides. Each step making the plates of her metal legs clank together in sharp, yet muted cadence. "Then I will pick. And do not worry, it will not be something silly like your virginity or anything like that. And no, they will not involve other people." She nods towards Midori, a smirk on her face. "That is just in poor taste, I am thinking."

Well, that's fine, you tell her, as you give the bat a few practice swings, with one hand, then two. You were about to tell her not to bet Souji, because, you know, you're not that kind of girl.

"Yes, yes, of course." Kharn taps her lips with a clawed fingertip, seemingly deep in thought as she looks down at you - before smiling again. "Ah, I know. If Murderface wins, then I will give you that package that a mutual friend of ours has asked me to give you, before she passed away. She is Malal, and I spent much of yesterday telling you about her."

...Malal, huh? Well. Isn't it a bit unreasonable, to bet something that you were meant to be given in the first place?

Fair enough. What about her, then? What if she wins, as if that isn't already the forgone conclusion?

"If I win," Kharn seems to take quite the delight in drawing her words out, "...then you will owe me a favor. And it is a favor that, when I ask, you cannot refuse. You will carry it out, immediately, without fail."

She holds out her clawed hand to you.

That's not too bad, you figure. You reach for her hand, but squint up at her just before you touch her. Just to be clear, you grumble, she's not going to make you do anything silly or humiliating as a favor, right? Nothing incriminating or illegal or anything exciting like that?

Kharn blinks at this, as if surprised. "It is...strange of you to be so cautious and specify like that, Murderface, but I assure you, I will not make you do anything you would not do otherwise. This is just something to make sure that you do go through with it, to...ah, reassure myself that I can count on my very good friend when the time comes."

It's here that she smiles, not grinning with mischief, but rather a genuine, if awkward smile, as if trying to comfort you. "Come on, surely you trust me, eh?"

As far as you can throw her. But you don't voice that one out, instead narrowing your eyes at her instead, before giving her a small nod. You reach forward and clasp your fingers around her wrist instead of her fingers, and she does the same.

"The pact has been made, and let both parties honor it should fortune favor them." Kharn murmurs underneath her breath, and it's then that she cackles as you part, stepping back from each other, putting distance between the both of you.

Wonderful. You feel like you've just made a deal with the Devil.

You give the bat a couple more practice swings as you watch Kharn show off once more, staff whistling bluntly through the air as she gives it another casual twirl. It's then that she levels it at you like a spear, pointing the end at your throat, and then - almost dismissively - at your stomach.

"I will enjoy this, I will be honest." You glimpse her smiling again - but it is not a smile. It is more like a snarl, drawing lips back from perfect white teeth. "Hanegawa! If you please!"

Midori nearly drops her phone at that, but steps forward to the edge of the canvas mat, nodding. She looks at you, then at Kharn, and raises a hand.

"R-Ready...! Set...!"

You spring forward, pre-empting Midori's final cry that would start this battle. Clearly, you do not consider this little training exercise the friendly match that it is - you have to win, especially with the stakes involved. Survival was no longer the baseline objective, here - Kharn had made it quite obvious that this would not end without either of you getting your share of bruises. You don't particularly care about the package, either - whatever it was, you would eventually get it.

You're just not comfortable with giving Kharn that favor, even if she did do her best to reassure you.

That kind of promise isn't made without someone looking for a permanent way out.

You cross the distance between you and Kharn in mere moments, your full-out dash turning into a lunge at the final step - and you grit your teeth at her expression of mock surprise as you bring the bat down in a traitorous one-handed swing. Pinning your hopes on knocking the weapon out of her hands before she could step back to get you in range of the staff's striking ends. This close, she wouldn't be able to bring it to bear, much less defend herself--

The harsh clack of colliding wood sends a sharp jolt up your arm as Kharn easily parries it, her claws sliding across the wooden shaft with an almost unnatural smoothness. A cackle leaves her lips, loud and insulting, as she brings the other end in a blurring, vicious return stroke that you manage to duck under with pure stupid luck than anything else.

Cursing her name, her family and everything that she stood for, you step forward again and bring the bat into a wild two-handed swing that would've murdered any watermelon it might have crushed into - and this one Kharn jumps away from, getting a surprised gasp from her and giving you a moment to breathe.

You use that moment to tell yourself just how stupid everything is.

She attacks first, this time, her staff sizzling through the air, point first - you manage to sidestep the lightning-fast thrust, but not before it brushes across your side, briefly digging and reminding you of forgotten injuries. The unwelcome pain is enough to make your eyes water, but you comfort yourself in the fact that yes, this was part of your plan.

You step forward, right into the overextended stab - and trap the staff underneath your arm, cinching it to you like a couched lance. With her weapon caught and yours already whistling towards the side of her head, you manage to flash her a weak grin as you anticipate your victory.

The world suddenly spinning, end over end, the ground leaving your feet flailing and kicking, could not have been timed more hilariously to remind you that life is not fair. Having your own ruse being used against you, your own grip on your opponent's weapon used to lift you into the air and then slam you into back into the floor with a crushing, bone-jarring thud - could not have been more apt in reminding you that cheatyfaces never prosper, and girls with black steel knifey shit on their arms and legs always win to go home and fuck the prom queen.

Painfully trying to pull breath back into your lungs, you somehow manage to get your feet back under you, still dazed, still stunned. Still wondering what the fuck just hit you.

For what it was worth, you saw it coming.

A slap. Open-handed. A wide, flat palm of black metal, coming up from hip level to the corner of your jaw, slamming into your face with momentous force. Like it had been shot from a rifle. You did not even have time to blink before the room itself went completely white one moment, before going black the next. You feel yourself bounce off something hard, and fall on something harder.

A moment more, and the world finally snaps back into painful existence. The first thought that comes into your shock-blunted mind is wondering if you've lost your glasses, or lost all sensation from your face, as you can't feel anything there anymore. Well, besides the pain, of course. Can't forget that.

Flat on your back, you crack open one eye - and you catch a glimpse of Kharn smiling down at you, the end of the staff aimed at your throat.

"Almost decent," The clawed woman cackles, her voice muffled to your still-ringing ears. "Actually, no, that is very unfair. Very competent, Murderface. Treachery still comes easily to you, I love that! It reminds me of the old you, before all this amnesia nonsense!"

She pulls away the staff, and offers the hand she'd nearly torn your face off with. You manage to take it after the first few failed attempts in reaching at its double-images. With contemptuous ease does she pull you back up to your feet, and you catch a whiff of her unperfumed scent; reminiscent of fresh blood, almost tangy, with the earthy tone of sweat.

Put them on again, and we can settle this best two out of three, yes?" She grins. "And you pick the weaponry, this time! Anything here, you can use - including those."

You take a moment to will everything to stop spinning - you'll be the last to admit it, but Kharn really rocked you there, and you doubt you'd be able to take more of that before passing out completely. You should have known she'd have some way of countering that, and your mistake only serves to anger you further.

Gritting your teeth against the pain - and brimming frustration - you force your eyes open just as you push Kharn away, roughly. You shove your glasses back on just as you growl to her that she should've knocked you out when she had the chance, to.

"Oh, come on, do not being so sore, Murderface! It is just first round!" Even without looking, you could hear the smile, the GRIN in Kharn's voice, and you hear her clanking footsteps as she follows your unsteady gait forward. "Do not be so mad! Maybe, sure, I could have let you down a bit more gently, but that is bigger insult to you if I did, I think." She clicks her tongue at you, as if trying to goad you on. "That is true, do not give me your lying silence. Now, come on, pick something else to try and kill me with!"

If she would just shut up for a second, then you'd be able to, you snap at her, before glancing around. The weapons in the racks you've approached...well, they certainly don't look practical. Most of them are hilariously oversized, built for someone nearly six feet tall and had a grip size that could choke a gorilla one-handedly. A bit more irritating is the fact that there doesn't seem to be any firearms around - of course, you wouldn't really use one in training like this, but the option would have been nice.

You turn around finally, shaking your head - the motion nearly making bile rise up your throat, Kharn's little slap haunting you still - and it's then that your gaze stops at the rack at the very center of the training hall. Four golden weapons, arrayed neatly.

Well, three weapons, really, now that you look at them a bit more closely, and a pair of golden fashion accessories.

A Desert Eagle, twin chainaxes(Kharn-sized, of course), an unsheathed katana, and...what looks to be twin bangles, the thick type that clasps loosely around your wrists. You've no idea what those do in particular.

All of them gold, and giving you quite the sense of foreboding.

"Ah, going immediately for them, eh?" Kharn comes up beside you, and you don't even have to turn to see that she's smiling, even now. "I cannot say I blame you. As garish and unpractical as they are, for people like us, they are the only choice, yes?" She reaches out with a clawed hand, and gently places it on the handle of one of the oversized chainaxes.

"I killed many people with this one, during my tenure as Warmaster. Witches, Magical Girls...everything." She looks down at the twin weapons with a wistful expression, almost longing, before withdrawing her hand. "Both of them are yours now, of course. Just as all the others are." The russian gestures to the gun, and the sword. "These I took from you during the procedure, if you will forgive me for taking the liberty to. I found them in your inventory, a strange thing. But it is always strange whenever these are involved."

It's then that she pats your shoulder, in an almost encouraging fashion. "Well, go on then, Murderface. Pick your weapon, and I will make sure that before this day ends, you will be able to kill many people with it." Kharn smiles, before blinking, and pointing to the bangles. "Oh, before I forget! Those bangles, they are not very useless, even though they look like so. They turn into, er, gauntlets, I think is the word. Very large ones, good for smashing things."

Well. That sounds handy.

Which one do you take from the rack?

Go for the bangles/gauntlets. This is supposed to be training session after all, and the hand to hand weapons are (as far as we know) more likely to render unconscious than kill.

I guess the katakana is also an option in that regard, as I double a blade would be able to get through Kharn's limbs.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl. You've forgotten everything else about yourself except for that bit. Which probably means that it's very important.

For someone waking up with a horrible case of selective amnesia, you seem to be handling it well. So well that in fact, mere minutes after you've woken up and breakfasted, you're already going toe-to-toe with another Magical Girl specifically born, bred and trained to massacre other Magical Girls such as yourself.

How can it be made more obvious than it is now? She has metal claws for fingers and axe blades for feet, you can't get much more high-spec than that.

Who do you have to see to get some of your own, anyway? You'd probably look alright with paws like hers. It would certainly make shaking hands with strangers quite the riot.

Probably not the legs, though - you're already comfortable with what you've got. She probably goes through tons of stockings with those stompers of hers. Sure, your pantyhose rides a bit too high, but that's easily taken care of if no one's looking or you don't mind embarrassing yourself. Plus, it comes with the costume, and you rather like how it brings the color scheme together.

Still, going back to Kharn, it's obvious that you're...quite outmatched in this little training session. To make matters worse, you've agreed to a little wager she posited at the beginning of it. To make things more interesting, she'd said. More exciting.

Moments after, she'd already put you into the floor once - maybe twice, really, if you're keeping count - as well as slapped you across the face hard enough that you're sure she knocked a few teeth loose, if not your entire jaw. And that was when you tried to cheat your way through, at that. What would have happened had you tried to win fair and square?

Nothing for it. You'd have to balance things out somehow, and you've decided to do just that by going for the weapons rack at the very center of the training hall. The weapons rack that, if you're honest with yourself, you didn't really want to approach so much as look at. Sure, the weapons arranged neatly on it can be considered beautiful, it not garishly ostentatious - but something about them just feels off. A subtle wrongness you can't really pinpoint.

You reach for the bangles. She said they changed into...metal gauntlets or something, right? That'd help at least. The chainaxes do look tempting, but you'd probably hurt yourself trying to figure out what to do with one of them, let alone two. The gun and the sword do look particularly useful, but you'd rather try something that's out of your comfort zone, but not so much that you'd be stumped on how to use them effectively.

It's all about punching people really hard. Not even you could screw that up.

Just as your fingertips near the set of bangles, however, you inexplicably run them along the slide of the Desert Eagle.

"Bartender shiny stuff in dreams are made of stooped necromancers. She sings like a banana wrist, having strayed too close to the constellation on their shaved skulls. The rain of frogs ended--"

You jerk your hand back at this, and Kharn blinks at you, at the same time that you blink at her. You ask her if she heard that.

"...Heard what?" The russian asks, confused. "I have heard nothing, Murderface. What are you dawdling about? Go on, make your choice. My blood is up, and it will be a shame to let the mood go to waste!"

You withdraw your hand from the rack - and it's with some degree of difficulty that you step back from the tempting luster of the brazenly-flashy weapons, turning away from their all-too-seductive shine filling your vision. This...this isn't right. WEapons aren't supposed to have voices. That's just crazy. This is insane, and there's no way you're picking one up, let alone use it.

Still...

"What is matter now?" Kharn frowns, and you hear impatience coloring her rough accent. "Do not tell me you have started to fear them, comrade Murderface." She clicks her tongue at you. "You are the last person I would think that would fear these. They are weapons, nothing more. They may carry the Blessed Lady's influence with them, but you are already guarded from it. Souji has made sure of that." A moment passes before she steps forward, her unnatural eyes narrowing. "I have made sure of that."

The Blessed Lady? Who the hell is that?

"Ayah, this amnesia of yours, it is beginning to rustle the jimmies," Kharn growls underneath her breath. "The Blessed Lady is..." She turns her head towards Midori, as if gauging if the green-haired girl is out of earshot, before turning back to you. "...it is complicated. You will learn more about her in time, perhaps she will visit you herself soon enough. Right now, it does not matter!" The russian gestures towards the rack with a claw. "For heaven's sake, Murderface, pick one already! We did not slave for much of last night and this morning to make you more susceptible to corruption! It is complete reverse!"

You return her glare. You're not exactly sure what to reply to that, but she seems...well, very sure of herself. As sure as someone with black skeletal claws and coal-black eyes can, anyway.

Taking a deep breath, you move closer to the rack again. Looking down at the menagerie of ominous-looking hardware. Setting your eyes upon them again.

Maybe you can touch them all first, see what happens with every one? Voices are just voices, after all. At the end of the day, they can't do anything to hurt you, other than just make you think you're crazy.

You take another breath, before reaching out with your hand again. A bit more carefully this time.

You shouldn't be scared of these things. It's outrageous. They're...they're just weapons, nothing to be frightened about. They don't kill people, not as such - the person using them does the killing. They're just tools, when all is said and done.

Yes. This is what you tell yourself.

You ignore the Desert Eagle for now. You touch the bangles first, placing your fingertips on the smooth, golden band of the one that you're supposed to wear on your right wrist.

The metal is...strangely warm. Not hot, but body-temperature warm. Strange, considering that it's a bit chilly in the training room itself. It shouldn't feel like someone's just taken it off. No chance of conducting heat from the rack, it's also cold, what being made of steel and everything.

No voices, as far as you concerned. Only a...twinge of loneliness? It feels like that, anyway. Nothing popping up in your line of sight that shouldn't be there, either.

The sword is a different matter altogether. You haven't even touched it, and you already feel that it's something that you should not be touching unless you're either desperate, or crazy, or both in equal amounts. If an object could actually have a palpable aura of...misfortune and despair, you can't find any other word heavy enough to describe it - then the golden katana, all shiny and pretty as you like, is the prime example of it. It is telling you, in no uncertain terms, to stay the fuck away.

So you do. For now, at least. You'll get back to it when it's not so moody. Maybe.

Strangely enough, the chainaxes - the huge, ugly monstrosities, birthed from the unholy union of two massive axes and two equally-massive chainsaws - feel nothing. In fact...you feel a bit lighter just touching it. Your mind suddenly much more clearer, everything being thrown into razor-sharp focus. You blink once, twice - and for a split second, you swore you saw Kharn suddenly fall apart, hacked into pieces, her long black hair trailing behind her head as it toppled to the floor, severed from the geysering stump of her neck.

You blink again as you remove your fingers from the haft of the bigger axe in the set. The illusion disappearing as quickly as it came, with Kharn still whole and examining her claws in frank impatience.

Shaking your head, you touch the last item on the rack - the Mark XIX Magnum Research .50 AE Desert Eagle, in its golden glory.

The voice comes back on, right in your ear. No, closer than that - it's in your mind, interrupting your thoughts.

"...I have tasted the devil's green blood. It runs in my veins. I've seen beyond the world of skin, the architecture of blood and bone marrow--"

But as quickly as the voice had come on, it had vanished. Cut off abruptly into silence.

It sounded almost akin to a prank call, someone spouting insane babble. You couldn't make sense of it. But you had an overwhelming sense of deja vu, and the voice sounded awfully familiar.

What do you do?

You bite your lip as you finally pull the bangles from their foam insets. They seem to be the safest choice for now, although you're still wondering about the chainaxes, and the heady sensation they gave you. Maybe some other time, some other opportunity. Right now you're going with what seems to be the least bit disturbing, the least bit daunting. The least likely to drive you insane.

The bangles come away easily, almost leaping into your hands, and you pull them on with all the care of someone strapping on a bomb to themselves. Taking care to clasp the golden bands around your wrists in a snug, yet comfortable fit, one for each hand.

As you carefully try to get acquainted with them - or at least, get used to the sensation of wearing jewelry (you don't seem the sort to do so, in any case) - you turn to Kharn to report what you saw. What you heard, what you felt. Was this supposed to happen at all? Is it normal for you to experience these things, or did the both of them really botch what was supposed to be a simple, routine procedure?

You expected Kharn to laugh at you, balk at you, or even get offended for what you've just said. Instead, she merely shrugs, a small smile on her face.

"AS much as I am confident with our procedure, Murderface, keep in mind that these weapons...they are strange, still, and we are not yet close to knowing what they actually do. The bulk of the side effects of using them, carrying them, we have made sure that they are absorbed by the circuit we've formed with your Soul Gem."

She reaches out with a clawed hand, curling those brutal spikes around one of the chainaxe's handles. Her smile grows slightly wider as she detaches it from the rack, along with its smaller, yet just as oversized partner. "Voices, visions, things like that...you are better off ignoring them. They are just echoes, shadows, the small symptoms that slip through. They are harmless."

...So she says. What happens to her, though, when she uses one? Like the chainaxes for example?

"...I feel as though I could fight and never stop," Kharn murmurs after a moment, before nodding. "Although, really, that effect has faded, bit by bit, over the years. It has been replaced with something else."

Replaced with what?

"A vision of my death." Kharn laughs. "But, ah, it is a promising one. It is in a heavy, pitched battle with something monstrous, something evil." Her face lights up at the memory. "I fall, but not before dealing my opponent a grievous blow. It was magnificent, reminding me of..." It's then that her expression fades, replaced with the casual friendliness of earlier. "...well, the old days. Back in Mitakihara, back when I was still Warmaster."

It does sound like an enviable thing to see, if it weren't so morbid.

"Ha! You would not say that if you had not lost your memory." She hefts the smaller chainaxe up, resting it against her shoulder. "It is the best fate any of us can ever hope for. Certainly, it is better than the alternative, eh?"

You are silent at that, before glancing down at your bangles. So far, they haven't really done anything, besides look pretty. You point this out to Kharn, who has the audacity to look as confused as you are.

"Huh. I...I was sure they would activate, somehow, upon you wearing them." Kharn murmurs, brow furrowing. "Although, to be fair, I have not used them at all, myself. Merely went with what Kyuubey reported."

Maybe this is just what they do, then? Just look pretty in the hopes that the opponent will back off due to superior accessorizing?

"...Your jokes are getting worse," Kharn notes, a mocking tone to her voice, despite her smile. "Maybe you are getting your memory back, eh, Murderface?"

Very funny. You decide to take them off and go for the other weapons, instead. Maybe...maybe the Desert Eagle. Sure it's rather unsporting, as your opponent's all but chosen to use a close-combat weapon, although their reach and size kind of renders their classification slightly moot. You're not that desperate for the sword yet, and--

There's a small spark as both bangles come in contact with each other, resulting in a brief flash of golden light. You close your eyes reflexively at this - at the same time hearing the sound of metal sliding, folding, clicking against each other. Feeling your arms suddenly sheathed in cold, unforgiving metal, from halfway up your upper arms to your fingertips. A coldness that disappears and melts into a comfortable warmth as the light finally fades.

You reach up with a hand to cover your mouth just as you open your eyes in a squint - and find that your vision is suddenly covered by a giant, brutally-clawed hand. Not like Kharn's - this was, in effect, a giant robot hand, painted completely black, the edges scarred and chipped, showing brilliant gold underneath.

The same for your other arm, too. Both of them large enough to reach down to the floor. Both of them large enough for you to actually reach out and crush something bigger than you in your grasp.

These look like something made to punch out God.

You shake your head. Later. You'll think about them later. Not now.

You look down at your new arms - courtesy of the golden bangles - and you experimentally move them, trying out your range of movement and such. Despite you suddenly having robot gorilla arms made to punch deities' faces in and through the back of their heads, they actually feel light.

Certainly, there's an obvious weight to your movements now, but you're still balanced, and it barely takes any effort for you to move these gigantic slabs of superdense metal posing as your hands. You can even wiggle the fingers around, although there's a curious grinding sound as some of the joints scrape against each other. Not a totally unpleasant thing, all in all.

The best part, of course, is that nothing else seems to be happening. No voices, no strange visions, nothing of the sort.

Well, there's the bit about you suddenly being excited about punching things with these babies, but you can probably attribute that to having them in the first place.

"Ahaha, look at you, like little child unwrapping first present at Christmas Day and getting coming-of-age vodka!" Kharn brings you back to reality, a wide smile on her face as she leans against the shaft of the bigger of the two chainaxes, the smaller one slung onto her back. "You are not experiencing anything strange, yes? No strange voices out of nowhere, no mysterious sights?"

Well, not really, unless you count the sudden names--

"See?" Kharn shakes her head, chuckling. "That proves it, the procedure was a success. Of course, there is still memory issue to deal with, but...I think you are dealing with it very well, for someone who does not remember her past."

It's something you're concerned about too, just not that big of an emergency. Or rather, that's how you feel about things at the moment. Something tells you that everything'll work itself out, in time - and you're not in any kind of hurry to pick up where you left off. You'd like to work on your own pace with that.

Kharn nods, her smile widening into a grin. "People deal with amnesia differently, I have read. Although, I will be honest - Murderface as I know her back then would not have agreed to something like this. There is a chance she will be very cross with you, when the time comes that the two of you must reunite. Hopefully she will have enough sense about her to forgive herself, even if she does not think she deserve it."

You actually manage to bark out a short, derisive laugh. The past you does sound like quite the bundle of kittens. Did she also gargle whiskey like it was mouthwash, too, besides smoking like a chimney? Did she wallow in self-pity, trying to drag others down with her, despite their best efforts to help her?

If that's true, then you can consider yourself lucky for the bout of amnesia, then. Whoever the past Murderface was - whoeve the past Chiaki Matsuda was - she sounds like a worthless, useless good-for-nothing excuse for a Magical Girl.

". . ." Kharn narrows her eyes at you. "I...understand your derision, comrade, but please do not talk about a cherished friend like that." It's with a creak of metal joints that she lifts the bigger chainaxe onto her shoulder, holding both of them now, one in each clawed hand. "I will not stand by and listen to such nonsense said about a friend who has willingly sacrificed everything she had and more for what she believed in. Even if the person saying it is herself."

The rules of storytelling demand that we have a dream where we meet the Hardened Time-Traveler Akemi Homura, the last Chiaki Matsuda and the new Murderface and punch the shit out of each other.

You shake your head at this, grinning at her. What's she so touchy about? It's you, isn't it? You're Chiaki Matsuda. You're Murderface. Her Murderface. What's she got to be angry about? You thought all Russians were supposed to be affable, illiterate bumpkins--

"Round two," Your sparring opponent with the double chainaxes snaps, her voice cold, brittle, sharp. Suddenly full of venom. "Enough talk, for now. You have chosen your weapon, the battlefield is leveled. Prepare to defend yourself, Chiaki Matsuda." She all but spits the name, any trace of a smile eradicated from her lips.

Both chainaxes spark as Kharn crashes them against each other, before crouching low, rows upon rows of monomolecular chainteeth resting against the canvas of the training mat as she prepares to spring. You blink at the sudden change of air in your supposed best friend, but choose to ignore it - instead stepping away from the rack in order to give yourself more room to charge. Both your gauntleted hands crunching into fists, flowers in reverse bloom. You crash them together as well, in mimicry of Kharn's - and you feel the ground underneath you tremble gently, in reply to the almost thunderous, bassy impact of the two metal fists colliding.

You promise to yourself that this next round will end up quite differently from the first.

Mainly with you punching Kharn into next week.

You still owe her for that slap.

She's got a new Murderface that doesn't treat her with outright suspicion or mistrust, doesn't remember the doujin thing, and doesn't remember Iori. You see, Incubators represent one way of harvesting energy.

Pinky is countering that method with her own set of 20

It's a mirror strategy and Chiaki is an irregular in this battle, as the golden weapons were circulating before the girl A's appearance.

At least that's how I see It

While this is true and I completly agree with you, I think that you forget something that Decu mentioned:

THEN I

"Well, you have to see it in her perspective."

That what we, and Murderface interpreted as slowley but surely getting intimate with her might be interpreted completly differently by Midori who, you shopuld keep in mind, has a rather low self-esteem.
If you consider this, Decu`s Explanation does make a lot of sense. That stupid girl thought that she was stuck in Chiaki`s Friendzone while Chiaki herself was very fond of her, thought not sure if love or not love or if it even is something she deserves.

I don't think QB is as interested in having the girls Witch Out.
Decu said that in this universe theIncubators get their energy quota from Grief Seeds getting used rather than the creation of a Grief Seed.
Also, creating a Magical Girls takes up energy that could have gone towards the quota.

So I think QB is more concerned with letting familiars become Witches and farming them than getting MG's to Witch out.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl. You've forgotten everything else about yourself except for that bit. Which probably means that it's very important.

For someone waking up with a horrible case of selective amnesia, you seem to be handling it well. So well that in fact, mere minutes after you've woken up and breakfasted, you're already going toe-to-toe with another Magical Girl specifically born, bred and trained to massacre other Magical Girls such as yourself.

How can it be made more obvious than it is now? She has metal claws for fingers and axe blades for feet, you can't get much more high-spec than that.

Who do you have to see to get some of your own, anyway? You'd probably look alright with paws like hers. It would certainly make shaking hands with strangers quite the riot.

Probably not the legs, though - you're already comfortable with what you've got. She probably goes through tons of stockings with those stompers of hers. Sure, your pantyhose rides a bit too high, but that's easily taken care of if no one's looking or you don't mind embarrassing yourself. Plus, it comes with the costume, and you rather like how it brings the color scheme together.

Still, going back to Kharn, it's obvious that you're...quite outmatched in this little training session. To make matters worse, you've agreed to a little wager she posited at the beginning of it. To make things more interesting, she'd said. More exciting.

Moments after, she'd already put you into the floor once - maybe twice, really, if you're keeping count - as well as slapped you across the face hard enough that you're sure she knocked a few teeth loose, if not your entire jaw. And that was when you tried to cheat your way through, at that. What would have happened had you tried to win fair and square?

Nothing for it. You'd have to balance things out somehow, and you've decided to do just that by going for the weapons rack at the very center of the training hall. The weapons rack that, if you're honest with yourself, you didn't really want to approach so much as look at. Sure, the weapons arranged neatly on it can be considered beautiful, it not garishly ostentatious - but something about them just feels off. A subtle wrongness you can't really pinpoint.

You reach for the bangles. She said they changed into...metal gauntlets or something, right? That'd help at least. The chainaxes do look tempting, but you'd probably hurt yourself trying to figure out what to do with one of them, let alone two. The gun and the sword do look particularly useful, but you'd rather try something that's out of your comfort zone, but not so much that you'd be stumped on how to use them effectively.

It's all about punching people really hard. Not even you could screw that up.

Just as your fingertips near the set of bangles, however, you inexplicably run them along the slide of the Desert Eagle.

"Bartender shiny stuff in dreams are made of stooped necromancers. She sings like a banana wrist, having strayed too close to the constellation on their shaved skulls. The rain of frogs ended--"

You jerk your hand back at this, and Kharn blinks at you, at the same time that you blink at her. You ask her if she heard that.

"...Heard what?" The russian asks, confused. "I have heard nothing, Murderface. What are you dawdling about? Go on, make your choice. My blood is up, and it will be a shame to let the mood go to waste!"

You withdraw your hand from the rack - and it's with some degree of difficulty that you step back from the tempting luster of the brazenly-flashy weapons, turning away from their all-too-seductive shine filling your vision. This...this isn't right. WEapons aren't supposed to have voices. That's just crazy. This is insane, and there's no way you're picking one up, let alone use it.

Still...

"What is matter now?" Kharn frowns, and you hear impatience coloring her rough accent. "Do not tell me you have started to fear them, comrade Murderface." She clicks her tongue at you. "You are the last person I would think that would fear these. They are weapons, nothing more. They may carry the Blessed Lady's influence with them, but you are already guarded from it. Souji has made sure of that." A moment passes before she steps forward, her unnatural eyes narrowing. "I have made sure of that."

The Blessed Lady? Who the hell is that?

"Ayah, this amnesia of yours, it is beginning to rustle the jimmies," Kharn growls underneath her breath. "The Blessed Lady is..." She turns her head towards Midori, as if gauging if the green-haired girl is out of earshot, before turning back to you. "...it is complicated. You will learn more about her in time, perhaps she will visit you herself soon enough. Right now, it does not matter!" The russian gestures towards the rack with a claw. "For heaven's sake, Murderface, pick one already! We did not slave for much of last night and this morning to make you more susceptible to corruption! It is complete reverse!"

You return her glare. You're not exactly sure what to reply to that, but she seems...well, very sure of herself. As sure as someone with black skeletal claws and coal-black eyes can, anyway.

Taking a deep breath, you move closer to the rack again. Looking down at the menagerie of ominous-looking hardware. Setting your eyes upon them again.

Maybe you can touch them all first, see what happens with every one? Voices are just voices, after all. At the end of the day, they can't do anything to hurt you, other than just make you think you're crazy.

You take another breath, before reaching out with your hand again. A bit more carefully this time.

You shouldn't be scared of these things. It's outrageous. They're...they're just weapons, nothing to be frightened about. They don't kill people, not as such - the person using them does the killing. They're just tools, when all is said and done.

Yes. This is what you tell yourself.

You ignore the Desert Eagle for now. You touch the bangles first, placing your fingertips on the smooth, golden band of the one that you're supposed to wear on your right wrist.

The metal is...strangely warm. Not hot, but body-temperature warm. Strange, considering that it's a bit chilly in the training room itself. It shouldn't feel like someone's just taken it off. No chance of conducting heat from the rack, it's also cold, what being made of steel and everything.

No voices, as far as you concerned. Only a...twinge of loneliness? It feels like that, anyway. Nothing popping up in your line of sight that shouldn't be there, either.

The sword is a different matter altogether. You haven't even touched it, and you already feel that it's something that you should not be touching unless you're either desperate, or crazy, or both in equal amounts. If an object could actually have a palpable aura of...misfortune and despair, you can't find any other word heavy enough to describe it - then the golden katana, all shiny and pretty as you like, is the prime example of it. It is telling you, in no uncertain terms, to stay the fuck away.

So you do. For now, at least. You'll get back to it when it's not so moody. Maybe.

Strangely enough, the chainaxes - the huge, ugly monstrosities, birthed from the unholy union of two massive axes and two equally-massive chainsaws - feel nothing. In fact...you feel a bit lighter just touching it. Your mind suddenly much more clearer, everything being thrown into razor-sharp focus. You blink once, twice - and for a split second, you swore you saw Kharn suddenly fall apart, hacked into pieces, her long black hair trailing behind her head as it toppled to the floor, severed from the geysering stump of her neck.

You blink again as you remove your fingers from the haft of the bigger axe in the set. The illusion disappearing as quickly as it came, with Kharn still whole and examining her claws in frank impatience.

Shaking your head, you touch the last item on the rack - the Mark XIX Magnum Research .50 AE Desert Eagle, in its golden glory.

The voice comes back on, right in your ear. No, closer than that - it's in your mind, interrupting your thoughts.

"...I have tasted the devil's green blood. It runs in my veins. I've seen beyond the world of skin, the architecture of blood and bone marrow--"

But as quickly as the voice had come on, it had vanished. Cut off abruptly into silence.

It sounded almost akin to a prank call, someone spouting insane babble. You couldn't make sense of it. But you had an overwhelming sense of deja vu, and the voice sounded awfully familiar.

What do you do?

You bite your lip as you finally pull the bangles from their foam insets. They seem to be the safest choice for now, although you're still wondering about the chainaxes, and the heady sensation they gave you. Maybe some other time, some other opportunity. Right now you're going with what seems to be the least bit disturbing, the least bit daunting. The least likely to drive you insane.

The bangles come away easily, almost leaping into your hands, and you pull them on with all the care of someone strapping on a bomb to themselves. Taking care to clasp the golden bands around your wrists in a snug, yet comfortable fit, one for each hand.

As you carefully try to get acquainted with them - or at least, get used to the sensation of wearing jewelry (you don't seem the sort to do so, in any case) - you turn to Kharn to report what you saw. What you heard, what you felt. Was this supposed to happen at all? Is it normal for you to experience these things, or did the both of them really botch what was supposed to be a simple, routine procedure?

You expected Kharn to laugh at you, balk at you, or even get offended for what you've just said. Instead, she merely shrugs, a small smile on her face.

"AS much as I am confident with our procedure, Murderface, keep in mind that these weapons...they are strange, still, and we are not yet close to knowing what they actually do. The bulk of the side effects of using them, carrying them, we have made sure that they are absorbed by the circuit we've formed with your Soul Gem."

She reaches out with a clawed hand, curling those brutal spikes around one of the chainaxe's handles. Her smile grows slightly wider as she detaches it from the rack, along with its smaller, yet just as oversized partner. "Voices, visions, things like that...you are better off ignoring them. They are just echoes, shadows, the small symptoms that slip through. They are harmless."

...So she says. What happens to her, though, when she uses one? Like the chainaxes for example?

"...I feel as though I could fight and never stop," Kharn murmurs after a moment, before nodding. "Although, really, that effect has faded, bit by bit, over the years. It has been replaced with something else."

Replaced with what?

"A vision of my death." Kharn laughs. "But, ah, it is a promising one. It is in a heavy, pitched battle with something monstrous, something evil." Her face lights up at the memory. "I fall, but not before dealing my opponent a grievous blow. It was magnificent, reminding me of..." It's then that her expression fades, replaced with the casual friendliness of earlier. "...well, the old days. Back in Mitakihara, back when I was still Warmaster."

It does sound like an enviable thing to see, if it weren't so morbid.

"Ha! You would not say that if you had not lost your memory." She hefts the smaller chainaxe up, resting it against her shoulder. "It is the best fate any of us can ever hope for. Certainly, it is better than the alternative, eh?"

You are silent at that, before glancing down at your bangles. So far, they haven't really done anything, besides look pretty. You point this out to Kharn, who has the audacity to look as confused as you are.

"Huh. I...I was sure they would activate, somehow, upon you wearing them." Kharn murmurs, brow furrowing. "Although, to be fair, I have not used them at all, myself. Merely went with what Kyuubey reported."

Maybe this is just what they do, then? Just look pretty in the hopes that the opponent will back off due to superior accessorizing?

"...Your jokes are getting worse," Kharn notes, a mocking tone to her voice, despite her smile. "Maybe you are getting your memory back, eh, Murderface?"

Very funny. You decide to take them off and go for the other weapons, instead. Maybe...maybe the Desert Eagle. Sure it's rather unsporting, as your opponent's all but chosen to use a close-combat weapon, although their reach and size kind of renders their classification slightly moot. You're not that desperate for the sword yet, and--

There's a small spark as both bangles come in contact with each other, resulting in a brief flash of golden light. You close your eyes reflexively at this - at the same time hearing the sound of metal sliding, folding, clicking against each other. Feeling your arms suddenly sheathed in cold, unforgiving metal, from halfway up your upper arms to your fingertips. A coldness that disappears and melts into a comfortable warmth as the light finally fades.

You reach up with a hand to cover your mouth just as you open your eyes in a squint - and find that your vision is suddenly covered by a giant, brutally-clawed hand. Not like Kharn's - this was, in effect, a giant robot hand, painted completely black, the edges scarred and chipped, showing brilliant gold underneath.

The same for your other arm, too. Both of them large enough to reach down to the floor. Both of them large enough for you to actually reach out and crush something bigger than you in your grasp.

These look like something made to punch out God.

How do you react?

You shake your head. Later. You'll think about them later. Not now.

You look down at your new arms - courtesy of the golden bangles - and you experimentally move them, trying out your range of movement and such. Despite you suddenly having robot gorilla arms made to punch deities' faces in and through the back of their heads, they actually feel light.

Certainly, there's an obvious weight to your movements now, but you're still balanced, and it barely takes any effort for you to move these gigantic slabs of superdense metal posing as your hands. You can even wiggle the fingers around, although there's a curious grinding sound as some of the joints scrape against each other. Not a totally unpleasant thing, all in all.

The best part, of course, is that nothing else seems to be happening. No voices, no strange visions, nothing of the sort.

Well, there's the bit about you suddenly being excited about punching things with these babies, but you can probably attribute that to having them in the first place.

"Ahaha, look at you, like little child unwrapping first present at Christmas Day and getting coming-of-age vodka!" Kharn brings you back to reality, a wide smile on her face as she leans against the shaft of the bigger of the two chainaxes, the smaller one slung onto her back. "You are not experiencing anything strange, yes? No strange voices out of nowhere, no mysterious sights?"

"See?" Kharn shakes her head, chuckling. "That proves it, the procedure was a success. Of course, there is still memory issue to deal with, but...I think you are dealing with it very well, for someone who does not remember her past."

It's something you're concerned about too, just not that big of an emergency. Or rather, that's how you feel about things at the moment. Something tells you that everything'll work itself out, in time - and you're not in any kind of hurry to pick up where you left off. You'd like to work on your own pace with that.

Kharn nods, her smile widening into a grin. "People deal with amnesia differently, I have read. Although, I will be honest - Murderface as I know her back then would not have agreed to something like this. There is a chance she will be very cross with you, when the time comes that the two of you must reunite. Hopefully she will have enough sense about her to forgive herself, even if she does not think she deserve it."

You actually manage to bark out a short, derisive laugh. The past you does sound like quite the bundle of kittens. Did she also gargle whiskey like it was mouthwash, too, besides smoking like a chimney? Did she wallow in self-pity, trying to drag others down with her, despite their best efforts to help her?

If that's true, then you can consider yourself lucky for the bout of amnesia, then. Whoever the past Murderface was - whoeve the past Chiaki Matsuda was - she sounds like a worthless, useless good-for-nothing excuse for a Magical Girl.

". . ." Kharn narrows her eyes at you. "I...understand your derision, comrade, but please do not talk about a cherished friend like that." It's with a creak of metal joints that she lifts the bigger chainaxe onto her shoulder, holding both of them now, one in each clawed hand. "I will not stand by and listen to such nonsense said about a friend who has willingly sacrificed everything she had and more for what she believed in. Even if the person saying it is herself."

You shake your head at this, grinning at her. What's she so touchy about? It's you, isn't it? You're Chiaki Matsuda. You're Murderface. Her Murderface. What's she got to be angry about? You thought all Russians were supposed to be affable, illiterate bumpkins--

"Round two," Your sparring opponent with the double chainaxes snaps, her voice cold, brittle, sharp. Suddenly full of venom. "Enough talk, for now. You have chosen your weapon, the battlefield is leveled. Prepare to defend yourself, Chiaki Matsuda." She all but spits the name, any trace of a smile eradicated from her lips.

Both chainaxes spark as Kharn crashes them against each other, before crouching low, rows upon rows of monomolecular chainteeth resting against the canvas of the training mat as she prepares to spring. You blink at the sudden change of air in your supposed best friend, but choose to ignore it - instead stepping away from the rack in order to give yourself more room to charge. Both your gauntleted hands crunching into fists, flowers in reverse bloom. You crash them together as well, in mimicry of Kharn's - and you feel the ground underneath you tremble gently, in reply to the almost thunderous, bassy impact of the two metal fists colliding.

You promise to yourself that this next round will end up quite differently from the first.

Mainly with you punching Kharn into next week.

You still owe her for that slap.

She's got a new Murderface that doesn't treat her with outright suspicion or mistrust, doesn't remember the doujin thing, and doesn't remember Iori. While this is true and I completly agree with you, I think that you forget something that Decu mentioned:

THEN I

"Well, you have to see it in her perspective."

That what we, and Murderface interpreted as slowley but surely getting intimate with her might be interpreted completly differently by Midori who, you shopuld keep in mind, has a rather low self-esteem. If you consider this, Decu`s Explanation does make a lot of sense. That stupid girl thought that she was stuck in Chiaki`s Friendzone while Chiaki herself was very fond of her, thought not sure if love or not love or if it even is something she deserves.

Considering that a good sized novel can be from 90-120k words, that is a pretty huge amount. And the story doesn't even feel to have reached the half so there's even more to go.

Also, creating a Magical Girls takes up energy that could have gone towards the quota.

So I think QB is more concerned with letting familiars become Witches and farming them than getting MG's to Witch out.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you are about to fight a veritable avatar of war.

A metal-limbed monstrosity wielding two horrendously-oversized chainaxes, each one caked with so much crusted blood that the gold beneath is only visible through the countless scars and furrows in the gruesome paintjob. The rows of monomolecular chainteeth lining the smiles of the axe blades still, inert in their deactivation, yet still seemed to magnify the threat of such barbaric weaponry. Solidifying their singular purpose; to tear enemies apart, to reduce corpses into biological wreckage.

Most people would consider your situation unlucky. Unfair, even.

Well, it's not like you didn't ask for it, talking to her like that.

Insulting your past self - the one eradicated from existence by your sudden bout of amnesia - seemed to be a really sore spot that you couldn't resist poking. A nerve you couldn't resist hitting. A button you not only pressed, but punched right into its seating, after you caught a fleeting glimpse of the rage that had once been in her. A rage seemingly extinguished long, long ago.

You're not stupid, of course. You're not that cocksure. You know that there's a very real chance of this little training session turning into a full-on brawl. In a place like this, with this kind of weaponry...it's easy enough to get carried away. One of you may not be able to walk away from this. One of you would have to be carried away in a zip-up bag.

But somehow that's alright with you. Just like the near-complete amnesia, you're perfectly at peace with the concept.

...Maybe, just maybe, you do have a problem.

One that will be addressed as soon as you put this cackling russian in her place.

You glance downwards at your gauntlets. You still can't believe how two small, nearly-insignificant bangles could change into something...so monstrously brutal. Your arms, nearly up to your shoulder, has been replaced with hulking metallic hands, each one nearly the size of a small car. Each finger the length of a grown man's arm, as thick around as a steel construction beam. Each hand painted in a smooth, slightly matte black, chipped away at the edges to reveal the gold underneath.

You have the sneaking suspicion, too, that the subtle rattling you hear with every movement you make sounds remarkably like a large box of brass cartridges being shaken about.

"S-Sempai?" Midori's voice calls from behind you, and you turn slightly to see the green-haired girl step onto the training canvas. "You...you're going to fight Miss Valnikov again, aren't you? With those golden weapons?"

You nod. That's the idea.

"Isn't...isn't that dangerous?" The Callidus looks at you, then at Kharn, then back again to you. "I mean, um, I was hoping Miss Kharn would instruct you instead, but to actually fight using two of them..."

How do you respond?

"...No, Matsuda-sempai. I'm...I'm staying." Midori says firmly, although the slight tremor in her voice betrays just how much she wants to do the opposite. "I'm staying, so that...I'll be here whenever sempai needs me." She nods at you, a hard expression set on her face, completely at odds at her slightly-quivering hands holding her smartphone to her chest.

You could almost see her fighting against her body's natural impulses, to run away from danger rather than stick around and become a potential victim. Trying to stifle the reflex of flight.

You don't exactly blame her. You're not exactly a pretty sight, with armored hands seemingly more fit for the hulking monstrosity that had barred your way from Misaka's room. Kharn isn't quite the picture of total safety and comfort, either - her bladed limbs already a jarringly striking element on her person, and the chainaxes aren't helping any.

Still, it's...nice, you suppose, that she's sticking around. You give her a smile that you hope looked sincere enough, and asked her if she could, one more time, start the round.

"Of course, sempai." Midori returns your smile. "You can count on me."

You thank her, and face Kharn once more. Flexing your hands inside the gauntlets - or at least, you think they're inside - and you feel an almost euphoric tingle of electricity going up the tips of your fingers, up to your shoulders, and then down your spine. The massive hands bunching once more into fists.

"We are ready, then?" Kharn snaps, but before you could reply, she looks up towards the ceiling. Shouting out what sounds like a command in Russian into the empty, chilly air of the training room.

Immediately, the rack of golden weapons folds up once more into the ceiling, along with the other racks of weaponry. Leaving a bare, metal-grilled training room, plates of scarred metal covering the walls. Metal that had seen better days, sporting furrows and scars, from clawed hands and chainaxes.

"Duel extremis. Live weapons Setting." A young female voice, sounding remarkably like the girl you made to cry, echoes inside the room.

"Much better." Kharn smiles again, the curling of her lips now completely devoid of warmth. "Now, Chiaki Matsuda. Let us begin your education."

If she'd stop yapping her trap, then maybe the schooling could begin.

"R-Ready...!" Midori raises her hand, looking at you uncertainly, then back at Kharn. "Set...! G--"

Midori never finishes her signal. She is too busy screaming and jumping back, trying to put as much distance between you and her. Desperately trying to get back to safety.

Kharn decided to cheat, this time.

And you watch as she brings the bigger chainaxe - the one with the name GOREFATHER carved into the gold of its blade, barely visible from the crusted blood - down at you in a double-handed overhead cleave.

You stand your ground. You decide to block.

You chuckle inwardly to yourself, just before your grind your heels into the ground, bracing for impact.

Despite you having no way to compare, you're sure that fighting Kharn is probably the worst decision you've ever made.

The first blow strikes with the force of a full battleship broadside, and it seemed - from the way the entire room quaked around the both of you - with an impact of the same volume. The deactivated chainaxe, monstrous in proportion and collossally oversized, crashes against your crossed gauntlets, both weapons banging together and locking fast. Sparks spray from the elbow joints of your augmented arms - the muscle-mimicking servos of the gauntlets overloading, shorting out, and then immediately repairing themselves in dutiful efficiency.

But you did it. You blocked the first blow. Sure, your arms feel like they've been just broken, healed over, and then re-broken again - but you did it. You survived something that probably would have cleaved the robot from earlier into half, and would have reduced you into a sticky red smear on the canvas.

"Impressive, comrade," Kharn says simply, conversationally. As if she was merely talking to you over a meal, instead of being the other end of a sparking weapon lock that you're straining to keep level. "No one has ever done that, blocking my opening attack." A smile. "No one still alive, in any case."

She really likes to hear herself talk, doesn't she?

With a snarled oath, you push forward against the stalemate - and it's with a terrific noise of crashing metal that you shove Kharn back, a moment before she could add her second weapon into the fray. More sparks fly as she skids back, the blade-tips of her feet tearing up the canvas underfoot, grinding into the metal underneath.

The stalemate broken, the distance between you restored, it's then that you let out the breath you've been holding. Feeling your abused lungs crackle as you pull in air, pinpricks of pain following the onrush of oxygen.

Only a few seconds in and you're already tired? Sure, it's Kharn, but you have really let yourself go.

No more cigarettes, you murmur inwardly between gasps, your eyes locked at your opponent, Kharn watching you almost gleefully. No more cigarettes if you survive this. Definitely.

"More, more!" Kharn cackles as she begins to circles you, both clawed fists clutching a chainaxe each, the one bearing Gorefather rolling its wrist in slow, taunting arcs. "Come on, Chiaki Matsuda, or whatever you are calling yourself now! Ah, I was such a fool to give you that name - I should have saved it for someone else much more deserving, much more worthy." She shakes her head. "I did not know that the one I gave it to would change into so weak, so infirm. A shame. A regrettable shame."

You never liked Murderface anyway...!

Kharn telegraphs her next attack with another harsh, keening laugh - you have the suspicion that she doesn't care at all about that, she's going to hit you no matter what - and you grit your teeth as you charge right into it, right into the killing arc of the two chainaxes being brought about into another overhead cleave. Yet another test of strength, another strike that you have to block successfully, otherwise it would go very badly for you.

This time you catch them. Your armored hands crashing, palms first, into the rows of deactivated chainteeth looking to chew flesh, to rip through bone. You're dimly aware of a curious pricking sensation where your actual palms should be - it's an itch more than anything - and you wonder if it's the feedback of having the paint, as well as some fragments of gold, now being shorn away from your gauntlets.

Before you could contemplate that, however, Kharn tears both blades from your grasp, creating more sparks as the weapons rake across each other once more - and it's then that she lays about with the chainaxes, chopping, bludgeoning, striking you from all sides with a fury and speed that could only be described as demonic. Focusing what will you have left - what little strength you could gather - you desperately try to block each one, smashing aside what you could and simply allowing what you couldn't to crash into the gauntlets themselves. Creating more furrows in the black paint, revealing that much more gold.

One blow sneaks past your defenses, and you gasp as you feel the teeth crunch into your shoulder, just before the entire weight behind the chainaxe - and the chainaxe itself, at that - forces you down into one knee. Both your gauntlets slamming into the now torn-up canvas, palms first, preventing you from the indignity of ending up facedown into the floor. The scent of your own blood teasing your nostrils, along with the sticky heat of a laceration at your side.

You grit your teeth and look up at Kharn, who is smiling terribly.

"Do you know how a chainaxe works, comrade?" Your opponent whispers to you, her voice smooth as silk. "It is a very simple weapon. The motor, of course, is at the head. Necessary wiring, encased in trunking, goes down inside the shaft of the handle, attaching the power source to the motor - as well as the activation rune here, where my thumb is."

A moment, and you force yourself not to gasp as she leans just a bit more on the axe, forcing the teeth deeper into your flesh.

"I only need to turn it on, and you will not have a shoulder anymore. Or an arm." Kharn smiles. "It will not happen, of course. If you concede." A moment. "I am sure it will be very hard for you to continue fighting with just one arm, as admirably as you have fought with two."

You open your mouth to snarl at her when you hear a sudden click, followed by the crunching of gears.

Kharn is gone, mysteriously enough. So are your giant robot hands, and the wound on your right shoulder. Well, you can still feel the sting of it, but it's not there anymore.

You've the strangest suspicion that you've been here before. Add to that, you feel that you're responsible for the entire thing.

A young woman wearing a black leather jacket - her face obscured with the hood itself, her legs clad in white thigh-high stockings and black maryjanes - stands in the edge of your vision. You don't remember her being there.

Her eyes, completely black except for the firey orange pupils, seems to glow from the shadow her hood casts upon her features.

"Thank you for choosing me," She murmurs, her voice muffled by the strange collar of her jacket's hood. "I thought you were going to choose the girl with the eyepatch. I...I don't like her much, to be honest."

"You're in my memory," The girl replies. "I'm not too sure which one. I...I don't remember much, after I died." She cocks her head to the side, curiously. "Add to that, I don't think you're supposed to be here. This is the first time I've talked to anyone else." A moment of silence. "...You're using the bracelets, aren't you? Are...are you fighting another one of the Blessed Lady's Chosen?"

The weapons absorb the soul of whoever was originally given them upon their death it seems

This girl was lonely and introverted so she makes the wielders outgoing and attract people / lovers

The katana has Kirika and all her hatred and bloodlust

The axes have Kharn's lust for battle and desire to cut things

Mami's guns will probably do the same, hopefully they teach the wielded to make panckes

You're not too sure what a Blessed Lady's Chosen is, but yes, you respond that you are using the bracelets. Not very effectively, you add, considering that you were a button press away from having your arm violently seperated from the rest of your body. You've seen what chainsaws can do to flesh if wielded competently. Taking a chainaxe to the shoulder would not be pretty.

"Well, um, a Chosen of the Blessed Lady is given a Golden Weapon. ...At least, that's what she told me, herself, when she gave me the bracelets." Even with the lower half of her face obscured, you could tell that she's quite flustered. "I...I don't know if there are golden chainaxes, but I suppose it's possible..."

You don't have a lot of time, so you ask her if she could help you at all, with your situation.

"I...I think so." The girl nods, and you hear the smile in her voice. "Yes, I think I can do that. You look the type to be able to take it, anyway. It's just a matter of not getting carried away."

Of course. You're not worried about that. You're the last person to worry about getting carried away.

The mysterious girl nods, before peering at you close for a moment, before drawing back. "Black with purple. That's...that's pretty. I like it." She shakes her head. "It'll be a shame about your glasses, though."

She takes both your hands in her gloved own, and the world around you disappears again - snapping you back right where you left off. As if nothing ever happened. Making you doubt that the entire encounter earlier had just been something of a hallucination, brought about by fatigue and shock and pain.

+That's rude,+ chimes a voice in your head. The girl, from earlier. +I'm still here.+

"I am waiting for you to concede, comrade," Kharn replies, in an almost bored tone. "Quickly, before I fall asleep and accidentally hit activation rune--"

She is cut off by your glasses clattering to the floor's ruined canvas, just as you look back up at her.

+The Blood God's Daughter,+ The girl gasps inside your mind, her voice flush with breathless admiration. +I didn't think I'd actually have a chance to fight her. I mean, I always wanted to, but I never had the chance...+

You decide to wait until Kharn manages to pull herself back up to her feet, while you take care of a little problem of your own. Namely, the rather hideous row of chainteeth marks on your shoulder, each one of them soaking blood into your costume. Not a very nice sight, all told.

+ Ah, let me take care of that, too. Shouldn't be too hard. + The girl chimes in again, and you feel a rather delightful electric sensation prickle the skin around the lacerations. The flame curling and lashing in front of your eye flares for a second, and it's then that you take a look once more - and find that the wounds themselves have been healed. As if they'd never been there in the first place, with only the bloody, ragged holes in your costume as proof of their former existence.

That's convenient. You thank her, and you're rewarded with a bashful embarrasment.

+ I-it's nothing. I can handle that sort of healing. Just a careful manipulation here and there.+ A moment. + I was expecting you to press your attack, but you didn't. That...you're a very kind person, aren't you? + A muffled, delighted noise, muffled by a hood's collar. + I'm glad you chose me. +

That makes two of you, you note, as Kharn finally manages to get back to a vertical base, her hair now wild and unbound behind her - the ponytail must've come undone in the impact. It certainly didn't detract from her appearance, what with the bloody grin on her face, crimson trickling down one corner of her mouth.

"Finally, this fight is much more interesting now," Your opponent turns to spit a glob of blood on the floor, her clawed fingers curling around the handles of her chainaxes. "I will say I am very impressed - it took you no time at all to find out how to properly use a Golden Weapon. It took me...well, considerably much more time to." A laugh. "Normally, I would stop the session here and now, but, ah...we have not found who is the winner yet, eh? Our wager depends on it, after all."

She's got a point, there.

"I will give you the previous round. You deserve it, I think," Kharn laughs, before wincing slightly as she nudges her bared midriff, a rather ugly bruise forming there. "So let us settle things in one last round. And let us do away with the niceties, for once." A sound not unlike an unseen beast roaring echoing in the training room, and a plume of crimson flame blossoms into existence in front of her left eye, a mirror image to yours. At the same time, both chainaxes roar, their beastly motors chugging, the chainteeth lining the blades blurring as they chewed air. "No holding back, Chiaki Matsuda."

+...I can't believe it. She's...she's so much more intense than I thought she'd be.+ The girl makes a mournful sound from behind her muffling collar. + Why couldn't I have died until AFTER I met her? +

You tell her the girl inside your mind to focus, please, on not getting any of your limbs hacked off this one last round.

But why...? You've got this one in the bag. And you're not about to throw a fight you're going to win.

Now I think our battle strategy should be to keep our distance and cannon Karn to death (lets pretend that only our pointer finger can shoot intill we need a surprise). Of Karn is able close to melee distance we should get even closer and get into a grapple (do not let her have free melee time this will kill us) and then trying to disarm her (our strength enhancement should be good for this).

Hold up one giant 'just a second' finger to Kharn and ask bangles-girl for a moment to talk to Midori.

At the very least, we should use Midori to give ourselves a quick once over and try to see things through her eyes.

You glance down at your gauntleted hands, then at Midori, and then finally at Kharn - the last one chomping at the bit to get on with it, the twin chainaxes still roaring their waspish call, clearly eager to get on with the slaughtering. To be perfectly honest, you are, too - but sending Kharn flying clear across the room, in her own turf, should be enough. More than enough payment for the slap earlier, which, really, was all you wanted to do.

It's with a nod to Midori - the green-haired girl sighing in massive relief - and a whistle to Kharn as you make the universal sign for a time out with your massive gunhands that you call her over. Kharn blinks at this, the flame at her eye sparking, before snuffing itself out - and she strides over to both of you just as the chainaxes idle, and then deactivate themselves. Ridding the training room of their ghastly noise.

"What is this here, then? Strategy meeting? Because, ah, I do not think opponent needs to be part of it--"

You tell Kharn that you concede. She gets her favor. You just wanted to pay her back for the slap earlier, after all. Yes. That was all you wanted to do, and you did it. You managed to use a Golden Weapon properly this time too, so there's no real need to continue. You're not that eager to get yourself killed, just yet.

Of course, if she really wanted her pound of flesh, then you'd be glad to accommodate her - so long as your Soul Gems are in a safe place, away from anything that could compromise them.

This of course gets a grunt of slight disappointment from Kharn. "Well, I cannot say I am not slightly disappointed, hence my grunting," The raven-haired Russian fowns, before shaking her head. "Ayah, and who would want that? There is no risk, no excitement! No, no, Murderface, do not want. I will accept your conceding, and this victory. I am winner, so I get that favor."

That's fine. You just hope you remember it. Since, you know, amnesia and all.

"I will make sure to remind you always." Kharn laughs, seemingly back to her old self. "Ah, well, I was hoping for more intense conclusion, but this is good too!" She pats you on the shoulder, friendly as you like. "You never fail to surprise me, comrade. Classic Murderface!"

+ I...what just happened? Did you just concede? But we could've put her down in two seconds flat, the rate of fire of both Ogre Arms would've reduced her to swiss cheese before she could've moved.. +

There's a time and place for everything, you reply to your new friend. And killing friends, even if you don't remember that much about them, isn't on the schedule just yet.

+ If...if you say so, Master. + The girl's voice is tinged with just a bit more than embarrassment, and you have the strongest suspicion that she's blushing. Your own flame dies out a moment later, and you feel a slight shift as your gauntlets disappear - leaving you with two normal arms once more, and the bangles still clasped around your wrists.

...Wait a minute. You look back at Kharn, the russian now replacing the chainaxes into their proper rack. Murderface, now? What happened to not being worthy of the title? What happened to Chiaki Matsuda?

Ah. Well. You apologize for what you've said about your past self, then. You're...not all that sure why you started saying those things, but you probably wanted to get a rile out of her, too.

Plus the slap really stung. You weren't expecting that. For training someone, she doesn't really hold back, does she?

"Is okay. I should not have been so mad about it. Even if you are not her, not at the moment, you are still a part of her. And I think she would not have cared either way." It's then that she guffaws, reaching forward to pinch your cheek carefully with a brutal claw. "Aha! Do not be such a baby, Murderface! Is gentle pat-pat!"

It wasn't gentle, that was the problem. Does she realize at all that she has metal claws for fingers?

"Okay, yes, no need to shout," Kharn winces, and both of you step back to watch the rack of golden weapons disappear back into the ceiling. "Training for today is complete, more or less! Just apply what you learned here to other golden weapons, and it will be good!"

Right. That's a relief, you're not too sure if you could take more of Kharn's training for the day.

...Wait, you still have the bangles on. Isn't that a problem? Shouldn't you give them back now?

"Keep them on," Kharn glances at the bangles still on your wrists, before nodding. "Is okay. We have proven that procedure worked. Better to acclimatize to them. Corruption is only when you use it, carrying it is mostly harmless." She reaches up to wipe sweat off of her brow, before smiling again. "You should ask her what her name is first, though. Should only be proper."

Her name...?

Oh. Right. Yuu. Got it.

+I am very pleased to make your acquaintance this day, Master.+

"She is nice girl, eh?" Kharn waggles her eyebrows, grinning as she leads you and Midori out of the training room. "Is too bad she is not with us any longer."

"Sempai...?" Midori ventures, the Callidus by your side. "What's Miss Kharn talking about? What girl?"

"We can talk about it over post-training vodka!" Kharn cheers. "Ah, am very thirsty! Had not had workout like that in a long time!"

Yeah. Why not. Sure. That sounds pretty good, actually.

You've no memory of what happened to you so far with these golden weapons, but something tells you that this is the first time that it ended relatively okay.

The only two original magical girls that have had a prominent role so far are Midori and Kharn. Kharn is heavily inspired by Black Gold Saw from Black Rock Shooter. Midori is wholly original, so far as I can tell, but her looks are inspired by Shion from Higurashi no Naku Koro ni.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you are about to fight a veritable avatar of war.

A metal-limbed monstrosity wielding two horrendously-oversized chainaxes, each one caked with so much crusted blood that the gold beneath is only visible through the countless scars and furrows in the gruesome paintjob. The rows of monomolecular chainteeth lining the smiles of the axe blades still, inert in their deactivation, yet still seemed to magnify the threat of such barbaric weaponry. Solidifying their singular purpose; to tear enemies apart, to reduce corpses into biological wreckage.

Most people would consider your situation unlucky. Unfair, even.

Well, it's not like you didn't ask for it, talking to her like that.

Insulting your past self - the one eradicated from existence by your sudden bout of amnesia - seemed to be a really sore spot that you couldn't resist poking. A nerve you couldn't resist hitting. A button you not only pressed, but punched right into its seating, after you caught a fleeting glimpse of the rage that had once been in her. A rage seemingly extinguished long, long ago.

You're not stupid, of course. You're not that cocksure. You know that there's a very real chance of this little training session turning into a full-on brawl. In a place like this, with this kind of weaponry...it's easy enough to get carried away. One of you may not be able to walk away from this. One of you would have to be carried away in a zip-up bag.

But somehow that's alright with you. Just like the near-complete amnesia, you're perfectly at peace with the concept.

...Maybe, just maybe, you do have a problem.

One that will be addressed as soon as you put this cackling russian in her place.

You glance downwards at your gauntlets. You still can't believe how two small, nearly-insignificant bangles could change into something...so monstrously brutal. Your arms, nearly up to your shoulder, has been replaced with hulking metallic hands, each one nearly the size of a small car. Each finger the length of a grown man's arm, as thick around as a steel construction beam. Each hand painted in a smooth, slightly matte black, chipped away at the edges to reveal the gold underneath.

You have the sneaking suspicion, too, that the subtle rattling you hear with every movement you make sounds remarkably like a large box of brass cartridges being shaken about.

"S-Sempai?" Midori's voice calls from behind you, and you turn slightly to see the green-haired girl step onto the training canvas. "You...you're going to fight Miss Valnikov again, aren't you? With those golden weapons?"

You nod. That's the idea.

"Isn't...isn't that dangerous?" The Callidus looks at you, then at Kharn, then back again to you. "I mean, um, I was hoping Miss Kharn would instruct you instead, but to actually fight using two of them..."

How do you respond?

"...No, Matsuda-sempai. I'm...I'm staying." Midori says firmly, although the slight tremor in her voice betrays just how much she wants to do the opposite. "I'm staying, so that...I'll be here whenever sempai needs me." She nods at you, a hard expression set on her face, completely at odds at her slightly-quivering hands holding her smartphone to her chest.

You could almost see her fighting against her body's natural impulses, to run away from danger rather than stick around and become a potential victim. Trying to stifle the reflex of flight.

You don't exactly blame her. You're not exactly a pretty sight, with armored hands seemingly more fit for the hulking monstrosity that had barred your way from Misaka's room. Kharn isn't quite the picture of total safety and comfort, either - her bladed limbs already a jarringly striking element on her person, and the chainaxes aren't helping any.

Still, it's...nice, you suppose, that she's sticking around. You give her a smile that you hope looked sincere enough, and asked her if she could, one more time, start the round.

You thank her, and face Kharn once more. Flexing your hands inside the gauntlets - or at least, you think they're inside - and you feel an almost euphoric tingle of electricity going up the tips of your fingers, up to your shoulders, and then down your spine. The massive hands bunching once more into fists.

"We are ready, then?" Kharn snaps, but before you could reply, she looks up towards the ceiling. Shouting out what sounds like a command in Russian into the empty, chilly air of the training room.

Immediately, the rack of golden weapons folds up once more into the ceiling, along with the other racks of weaponry. Leaving a bare, metal-grilled training room, plates of scarred metal covering the walls. Metal that had seen better days, sporting furrows and scars, from clawed hands and chainaxes.

"Duel extremis. Live weapons Setting." A young female voice, sounding remarkably like the girl you made to cry, echoes inside the room.

"Much better." Kharn smiles again, the curling of her lips now completely devoid of warmth. "Now, Chiaki Matsuda. Let us begin your education."

If she'd stop yapping her trap, then maybe the schooling could begin.

"R-Ready...!" Midori raises her hand, looking at you uncertainly, then back at Kharn. "Set...! G--"

Midori never finishes her signal. She is too busy screaming and jumping back, trying to put as much distance between you and her. Desperately trying to get back to safety.

Kharn decided to cheat, this time.

And you watch as she brings the bigger chainaxe - the one with the name GOREFATHER carved into the gold of its blade, barely visible from the crusted blood - down at you in a double-handed overhead cleave.

You stand your ground. You decide to block.

You chuckle inwardly to yourself, just before your grind your heels into the ground, bracing for impact.

Despite you having no way to compare, you're sure that fighting Kharn is probably the worst decision you've ever made.

The first blow strikes with the force of a full battleship broadside, and it seemed - from the way the entire room quaked around the both of you - with an impact of the same volume. The deactivated chainaxe, monstrous in proportion and collossally oversized, crashes against your crossed gauntlets, both weapons banging together and locking fast. Sparks spray from the elbow joints of your augmented arms - the muscle-mimicking servos of the gauntlets overloading, shorting out, and then immediately repairing themselves in dutiful efficiency.

But you did it. You blocked the first blow. Sure, your arms feel like they've been just broken, healed over, and then re-broken again - but you did it. You survived something that probably would have cleaved the robot from earlier into half, and would have reduced you into a sticky red smear on the canvas.

"Impressive, comrade," Kharn says simply, conversationally. As if she was merely talking to you over a meal, instead of being the other end of a sparking weapon lock that you're straining to keep level. "No one has ever done that, blocking my opening attack." A smile. "No one still alive, in any case."

She really likes to hear herself talk, doesn't she?

With a snarled oath, you push forward against the stalemate - and it's with a terrific noise of crashing metal that you shove Kharn back, a moment before she could add her second weapon into the fray. More sparks fly as she skids back, the blade-tips of her feet tearing up the canvas underfoot, grinding into the metal underneath.

The stalemate broken, the distance between you restored, it's then that you let out the breath you've been holding. Feeling your abused lungs crackle as you pull in air, pinpricks of pain following the onrush of oxygen.

Only a few seconds in and you're already tired? Sure, it's Kharn, but you have really let yourself go.

No more cigarettes, you murmur inwardly between gasps, your eyes locked at your opponent, Kharn watching you almost gleefully. No more cigarettes if you survive this. Definitely.

"More, more!" Kharn cackles as she begins to circles you, both clawed fists clutching a chainaxe each, the one bearing Gorefather rolling its wrist in slow, taunting arcs. "Come on, Chiaki Matsuda, or whatever you are calling yourself now! Ah, I was such a fool to give you that name - I should have saved it for someone else much more deserving, much more worthy." She shakes her head. "I did not know that the one I gave it to would change into so weak, so infirm. A shame. A regrettable shame."

You never liked Murderface anyway...!

Kharn telegraphs her next attack with another harsh, keening laugh - you have the suspicion that she doesn't care at all about that, she's going to hit you no matter what - and you grit your teeth as you charge right into it, right into the killing arc of the two chainaxes being brought about into another overhead cleave. Yet another test of strength, another strike that you have to block successfully, otherwise it would go very badly for you.

This time you catch them. Your armored hands crashing, palms first, into the rows of deactivated chainteeth looking to chew flesh, to rip through bone. You're dimly aware of a curious pricking sensation where your actual palms should be - it's an itch more than anything - and you wonder if it's the feedback of having the paint, as well as some fragments of gold, now being shorn away from your gauntlets.

Before you could contemplate that, however, Kharn tears both blades from your grasp, creating more sparks as the weapons rake across each other once more - and it's then that she lays about with the chainaxes, chopping, bludgeoning, striking you from all sides with a fury and speed that could only be described as demonic. Focusing what will you have left - what little strength you could gather - you desperately try to block each one, smashing aside what you could and simply allowing what you couldn't to crash into the gauntlets themselves. Creating more furrows in the black paint, revealing that much more gold.

One blow sneaks past your defenses, and you gasp as you feel the teeth crunch into your shoulder, just before the entire weight behind the chainaxe - and the chainaxe itself, at that - forces you down into one knee. Both your gauntlets slamming into the now torn-up canvas, palms first, preventing you from the indignity of ending up facedown into the floor. The scent of your own blood teasing your nostrils, along with the sticky heat of a laceration at your side.

You grit your teeth and look up at Kharn, who is smiling terribly.

"Do you know how a chainaxe works, comrade?" Your opponent whispers to you, her voice smooth as silk. "It is a very simple weapon. The motor, of course, is at the head. Necessary wiring, encased in trunking, goes down inside the shaft of the handle, attaching the power source to the motor - as well as the activation rune here, where my thumb is."

A moment, and you force yourself not to gasp as she leans just a bit more on the axe, forcing the teeth deeper into your flesh.

"I only need to turn it on, and you will not have a shoulder anymore. Or an arm." Kharn smiles. "It will not happen, of course. If you concede." A moment. "I am sure it will be very hard for you to continue fighting with just one arm, as admirably as you have fought with two."

Kharn is gone, mysteriously enough. So are your giant robot hands, and the wound on your right shoulder. Well, you can still feel the sting of it, but it's not there anymore.

You've the strangest suspicion that you've been here before. Add to that, you feel that you're responsible for the entire thing.

A young woman wearing a black leather jacket - her face obscured with the hood itself, her legs clad in white thigh-high stockings and black maryjanes - stands in the edge of your vision. You don't remember her being there.

Her eyes, completely black except for the firey orange pupils, seems to glow from the shadow her hood casts upon her features.

"Thank you for choosing me," She murmurs, her voice muffled by the strange collar of her jacket's hood. "I thought you were going to choose the girl with the eyepatch. I...I don't like her much, to be honest."

"You're in my memory," The girl replies. "I'm not too sure which one. I...I don't remember much, after I died." She cocks her head to the side, curiously. "Add to that, I don't think you're supposed to be here. This is the first time I've talked to anyone else." A moment of silence. "...You're using the bracelets, aren't you? Are...are you fighting another one of the Blessed Lady's Chosen?"

The weapons absorb the soul of whoever was originally given them upon their death it seems

This girl was lonely and introverted so she makes the wielders outgoing and attract people / lovers

Mami's guns will probably do the same, hopefully they teach the wielded to make panckes

You're not too sure what a Blessed Lady's Chosen is, but yes, you respond that you are using the bracelets. Not very effectively, you add, considering that you were a button press away from having your arm violently seperated from the rest of your body. You've seen what chainsaws can do to flesh if wielded competently. Taking a chainaxe to the shoulder would not be pretty.

"Well, um, a Chosen of the Blessed Lady is given a Golden Weapon. ...At least, that's what she told me, herself, when she gave me the bracelets." Even with the lower half of her face obscured, you could tell that she's quite flustered. "I...I don't know if there are golden chainaxes, but I suppose it's possible..."

You don't have a lot of time, so you ask her if she could help you at all, with your situation.

"I...I think so." The girl nods, and you hear the smile in her voice. "Yes, I think I can do that. You look the type to be able to take it, anyway. It's just a matter of not getting carried away."

Of course. You're not worried about that. You're the last person to worry about getting carried away.

The mysterious girl nods, before peering at you close for a moment, before drawing back. "Black with purple. That's...that's pretty. I like it." She shakes her head. "It'll be a shame about your glasses, though."

She takes both your hands in her gloved own, and the world around you disappears again - snapping you back right where you left off. As if nothing ever happened. Making you doubt that the entire encounter earlier had just been something of a hallucination, brought about by fatigue and shock and pain.

+That's rude,+ chimes a voice in your head. The girl, from earlier. +I'm still here.+

"I am waiting for you to concede, comrade," Kharn replies, in an almost bored tone. "Quickly, before I fall asleep and accidentally hit activation rune--"

She is cut off by your glasses clattering to the floor's ruined canvas, just as you look back up at her.

You decide to wait until Kharn manages to pull herself back up to her feet, while you take care of a little problem of your own. Namely, the rather hideous row of chainteeth marks on your shoulder, each one of them soaking blood into your costume. Not a very nice sight, all told.

+ Ah, let me take care of that, too. Shouldn't be too hard. + The girl chimes in again, and you feel a rather delightful electric sensation prickle the skin around the lacerations. The flame curling and lashing in front of your eye flares for a second, and it's then that you take a look once more - and find that the wounds themselves have been healed. As if they'd never been there in the first place, with only the bloody, ragged holes in your costume as proof of their former existence.

That's convenient. You thank her, and you're rewarded with a bashful embarrasment.

+ I-it's nothing. I can handle that sort of healing. Just a careful manipulation here and there.+ A moment. + I was expecting you to press your attack, but you didn't. That...you're a very kind person, aren't you? + A muffled, delighted noise, muffled by a hood's collar. + I'm glad you chose me. +

That makes two of you, you note, as Kharn finally manages to get back to a vertical base, her hair now wild and unbound behind her - the ponytail must've come undone in the impact. It certainly didn't detract from her appearance, what with the bloody grin on her face, crimson trickling down one corner of her mouth.

"Finally, this fight is much more interesting now," Your opponent turns to spit a glob of blood on the floor, her clawed fingers curling around the handles of her chainaxes. "I will say I am very impressed - it took you no time at all to find out how to properly use a Golden Weapon. It took me...well, considerably much more time to." A laugh. "Normally, I would stop the session here and now, but, ah...we have not found who is the winner yet, eh? Our wager depends on it, after all."

She's got a point, there.

"I will give you the previous round. You deserve it, I think," Kharn laughs, before wincing slightly as she nudges her bared midriff, a rather ugly bruise forming there. "So let us settle things in one last round. And let us do away with the niceties, for once." A sound not unlike an unseen beast roaring echoing in the training room, and a plume of crimson flame blossoms into existence in front of her left eye, a mirror image to yours. At the same time, both chainaxes roar, their beastly motors chugging, the chainteeth lining the blades blurring as they chewed air. "No holding back, Chiaki Matsuda."

+...I can't believe it. She's...she's so much more intense than I thought she'd be.+ The girl makes a mournful sound from behind her muffling collar. + Why couldn't I have died until AFTER I met her? +

You tell her the girl inside your mind to focus, please, on not getting any of your limbs hacked off this one last round.

But why...? You've got this one in the bag. And you're not about to throw a fight you're going to win.

Now I think our battle strategy should be to keep our distance and cannon Karn to death (lets pretend that only our pointer finger can shoot intill we need a surprise). Of Karn is able close to melee distance we should get even closer and get into a grapple (do not let her have free melee time this will kill us) and then trying to disarm her (our strength enhancement should be good for this).

depends on his preferences, Kharn would need to vent a lot and Souji doesn't strike me as a guy who has a exceptional Stamina and she would likely break him in half if i am correct.

or he could have the highest endurance out of all the people on the base and be unbreakable in bed.
in which case he and Chiaki would probably become best buddies overnight.

You glance down at your gauntleted hands, then at Midori, and then finally at Kharn - the last one chomping at the bit to get on with it, the twin chainaxes still roaring their waspish call, clearly eager to get on with the slaughtering. To be perfectly honest, you are, too - but sending Kharn flying clear across the room, in her own turf, should be enough. More than enough payment for the slap earlier, which, really, was all you wanted to do.

It's with a nod to Midori - the green-haired girl sighing in massive relief - and a whistle to Kharn as you make the universal sign for a time out with your massive gunhands that you call her over. Kharn blinks at this, the flame at her eye sparking, before snuffing itself out - and she strides over to both of you just as the chainaxes idle, and then deactivate themselves. Ridding the training room of their ghastly noise.

"What is this here, then? Strategy meeting? Because, ah, I do not think opponent needs to be part of it--"

You tell Kharn that you concede. She gets her favor. You just wanted to pay her back for the slap earlier, after all. Yes. That was all you wanted to do, and you did it. You managed to use a Golden Weapon properly this time too, so there's no real need to continue. You're not that eager to get yourself killed, just yet.

Of course, if she really wanted her pound of flesh, then you'd be glad to accommodate her - so long as your Soul Gems are in a safe place, away from anything that could compromise them.

This of course gets a grunt of slight disappointment from Kharn. "Well, I cannot say I am not slightly disappointed, hence my grunting," The raven-haired Russian fowns, before shaking her head. "Ayah, and who would want that? There is no risk, no excitement! No, no, Murderface, do not want. I will accept your conceding, and this victory. I am winner, so I get that favor."

That's fine. You just hope you remember it. Since, you know, amnesia and all.

"I will make sure to remind you always." Kharn laughs, seemingly back to her old self. "Ah, well, I was hoping for more intense conclusion, but this is good too!" She pats you on the shoulder, friendly as you like. "You never fail to surprise me, comrade. Classic Murderface!"

+ I...what just happened? Did you just concede? But we could've put her down in two seconds flat, the rate of fire of both Ogre Arms would've reduced her to swiss cheese before she could've moved.. +

There's a time and place for everything, you reply to your new friend. And killing friends, even if you don't remember that much about them, isn't on the schedule just yet.

+ If...if you say so, Master. + The girl's voice is tinged with just a bit more than embarrassment, and you have the strongest suspicion that she's blushing. Your own flame dies out a moment later, and you feel a slight shift as your gauntlets disappear - leaving you with two normal arms once more, and the bangles still clasped around your wrists.

...Wait a minute. You look back at Kharn, the russian now replacing the chainaxes into their proper rack. Murderface, now? What happened to not being worthy of the title? What happened to Chiaki Matsuda?

Ah. Well. You apologize for what you've said about your past self, then. You're...not all that sure why you started saying those things, but you probably wanted to get a rile out of her, too.

Plus the slap really stung. You weren't expecting that. For training someone, she doesn't really hold back, does she?

"Is okay. I should not have been so mad about it. Even if you are not her, not at the moment, you are still a part of her. And I think she would not have cared either way." It's then that she guffaws, reaching forward to pinch your cheek carefully with a brutal claw. "Aha! Do not be such a baby, Murderface! Is gentle pat-pat!"

It wasn't gentle, that was the problem. Does she realize at all that she has metal claws for fingers?

"Okay, yes, no need to shout," Kharn winces, and both of you step back to watch the rack of golden weapons disappear back into the ceiling. "Training for today is complete, more or less! Just apply what you learned here to other golden weapons, and it will be good!"

Right. That's a relief, you're not too sure if you could take more of Kharn's training for the day.

...Wait, you still have the bangles on. Isn't that a problem? Shouldn't you give them back now?

"Keep them on," Kharn glances at the bangles still on your wrists, before nodding. "Is okay. We have proven that procedure worked. Better to acclimatize to them. Corruption is only when you use it, carrying it is mostly harmless." She reaches up to wipe sweat off of her brow, before smiling again. "You should ask her what her name is first, though. Should only be proper."

Her name...?

Oh. Right. Yuu. Got it.

+I am very pleased to make your acquaintance this day, Master.+

"She is nice girl, eh?" Kharn waggles her eyebrows, grinning as she leads you and Midori out of the training room. "Is too bad she is not with us any longer."

"Sempai...?" Midori ventures, the Callidus by your side. "What's Miss Kharn talking about? What girl?"

"We can talk about it over post-training vodka!" Kharn cheers. "Ah, am very thirsty! Had not had workout like that in a long time!"

Yeah. Why not. Sure. That sounds pretty good, actually.

You've no memory of what happened to you so far with these golden weapons, but something tells you that this is the first time that it ended relatively okay.

Relatively okay meaning that nobody got brutally murdered for a change.

The only two original magical girls that have had a prominent role so far are Midori and Kharn. Kharn is heavily inspired by Black Gold Saw from Black Rock Shooter. Midori is wholly original, so far as I can tell, but her looks are inspired by Shion from Higurashi no Naku Koro ni.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you've just survived a training session with Kharn the Betrayer. You have the feeling that you're lucky to be alive, and very, very lucky to be intact.

All thanks to the voices in your head - and a rather tan-skinned young woman whose soul seems to be bound in two golden bangles that turn into huge robot fists. Each the size of a Volkswagen Beetle perched on its fender, and each able to deliver the sheer impact of a battleship broadside in the form of punches.

You're not even sure how Kharn survived a solid hit like that earlier, she should've been reduced to paste with a straight like that. You even felt something crack on impact, but she looks fine - well, besides the bruises she got.

In any case, you're coming away from this experience with a new friend, two rather ostentatious-looking accessories clasped around your wrists, and...well, a couple of holes on the shoulder of your costume, from where Kharn's chainaxe had scored you. Yuu, your new friend, had taken care of the flesh wounds, but it doesn't seem like she could perform similar miracles on cloth.

And sane.

Somewhat.

Hopefully.

You're still getting used to having regular-sized hands without autocannons hiding inside each of your metal-plated fingers when you and your little group - namely Midori and Kharn - manage to make it back to the living quarters. You hear Souji in the kitchen, talking to the...child from earlier, it sounds like. Their voices low, subdued - at least in Souji's case, that is. The child - you remember her name is Misaka - seems close to tears as it is, with that crackling slurriness that children always get whenever they're an inch to crying their eyes out.

Pity you can't understand Russian. Kharn seems to be able to, however, and you see a twinge of emotion cross the face that had been grinning at you with a rather frightening bloodlust earlier. It's almost amusing, how someone who could be so monstrous could also be...human.

"...Ah." You hear Kharn murmur, shaking her head. "Misaka is still trying to get over the fact that...you are not the Murderface she loves." The woman smiles at you with a smile resembling one of guilt, and shrugs her bare shoulders. "...I am very sorry, Murderface. This is the last thing you need, I think."

You shake your head. Not her fault, it couldn't exactly be helped.

"...Yes, well, I--"

"Murderface!"

A sharp cry from the kitchen silences Kharn, and a patter of footsteps turn your head towards the door leading to the small room - and you see the child from earlier standing there, looking up at you with eyes reddened from too much crying. Before you can move, she runs towards you, full out, her lab coat flying out from behind her. She nearly bears you to the floor as she throws her hands around your waist, burying her face into your stomach.

The sound of her crying pitifully into your costume is muffled, and yet you could hear her murmuring your name in between sobs.

"Sempai, um..." You hear Midori beside you. "Do...do you want me to take care of Misaka-chan?" You turn to see her pained expression at the girl's crying. "I'm not as good with her as you were, but I could..."

"It is usually better to just let her cry herself tired, I think. But..." Kharn gestures at you with a claw. "It is your choice, Murderface."

You turn towards Kharn and Midori, nodding at them each in turn, and they seem to understand your unspoken message well enough. Kharn excuses herself by making her way where the living quarters' rooms should be; Midori murmurs something about getting you something to drink as she quietly moves to the kitchen. You could use a drink, yes; that sparring match with a blade-limbed demon had taken quite a bit out of you, and you suddenly feel a thirst that needs quenching quickly.

With the both of you left alone there, you carefully lift a bangled hand - the golden band glinting in the glow of the fluorescent lighting above you - and it's gently, gingerly, that you pat her on the head. Smoothing the thick, soft brown hair of the young woman currently soaking your costume with her tears.

She shivers palpably at your touch, and you feel her arms curl around you a bit more tightly, and you take that as a sign that you haven't messed it up completely. You resume with the affectionate gesture, running your fingers through her hair, and after a while she rewards your patience with a small hiccup, as well as a brief hiatus on the waterworks.

"Murderface forgot Misaka," She murmurs, her voice hoarse. "Murderface broke her promise! Murderface promised she would never forget Misaka whatever...h-happens!"

You brush some of her hair away from her face and eyes, the strands matted to her skin with her sweat and tears, and you try your best to frame...an apology for your current situation. No, you don't have an idea what got you into this situation, nor you remember anything prior from waking up, but...clearly, your past self had promised her something that you can't keep. Not at your state.

But you're sorry, you murmur, holding her gaze. You don't like apologizing for things that's not necessarily your fault, but you'll apologize to her. And you'll try your best to keep your promise this time.

"Y-you won't forget Misaka again?" She asks, holding you tighter. "Really...?"

No. You won't forget her. And to make it official...you're swear it on your new name. Not Murderface, but Chiaki Matsuda.

"Chiaki...?" Misaka repeats the name, a few times, as if trying to get used to it.

You nod. No more calling you Murderface. Murderface, whoever she was, is gone. You're not her, and while you won't try to replace her, you'll try to be just as good as...as...

You look around, and see Kharn, dabbing a towel into her wet hair - she looks like she'd jumped into a shower briefly, and was now back into her regular clothes - and she silently mouths two words at you.

"Big...Big Sister Chiaki?" Now, Misaka's eyes are wide, seemingly amazed, forgetting what had made her cry in the first place. "Murderface will be my big sister...?"

You manage a nod at this, and you try to manage what should look like a small smile. A big sister. Exactly.

She squeals at this, jumping up and reaching up at you with both hands. You find yourself made to bow down slightly as she pulls your neck towards her - and you feel a soft pair of lips press against your cheek. "Big Sister! Misaka has a big sister, now! Misaka has to tell useless big brother who is dumb also!"

You manage to straighten up just as she all but scampers back to the kitchen. A surprised shriek from Midori, and a shout of astonishment from Souji heralds her arrival - and you hear her babbling in excited Russian. You also hear Souji's grumbling replies.

"...Well, it is not like I do not approve, or anything..." Kharn finishes wringing her hair of water, before giving her scalp a careful scrub. "But be careful what you are hoping to do, eh, Murderface? After all, we are no longer what we appear to be." She reaches into a pocket of her lab coat with a free clawed hand - and it's with a clink of her skeletal claws that she tosses something at your direction. A bauble, no bigger than a small egg, glowing with a smoky purple light. You catch the object easily in your hand, feeling a cold weight on your palm as your fingers close upon it.

"We are the Blessed Lady's Chosen, and we are the last people to make that kind of promises."

It's your Soul Gem. That much is clear.

But it's nothing like you remember.

Or at least, what you should remember. Soul Gems aren't supposed to have the brass gilding protecting the gemstone to be totally black, reminiscent of a Grief Seed. The jewel shouldn't be so dark, either, with what looks to be a small tongue of violet fire flickering at the very center of it, seemingly warding off the darkness trying to engulf it from all around.

Nor it should have the roman numeral VIII written in gold at the very base of it.

You glance up at Kharn questioningly at this, and she merely shrugs.

"It is what happens. An outcome of the procedure. I believe it is harmless, as I also have something similar on mine. Maybe it is ostentation, maybe it is a mark of the Chosen." Kharn shrugs. "They do match the Golden Weapon you are given, I find. Mine has the same numeral as the chainaxes earlier, so maybe it is that."

Maybe. You flex your fingers carefully, and the Soul Gem disappears in a small gout of purple flame - one that leaps from your palm and onto the back of your right hand. Manifesting there as a nearly-flat diamond of the same darkened amethyst, gilded with gold.

At least it still works. That's some consolation.

"Alright..." Kharn begins just as Midori exits from the kitchen, a glass of some clear liquid at hand, ice cubes clinking inside along with her movement. "If you are feeling up to it, we can do interrogation with Wakaba Mirai now, I am thinking. We have let her rest for a while, already." At the russian's words, Midori very nearly tips the glass as she passes it to you, seemingly taken off-guard by the name you don't exactly recognize. You manage to take the glass before disaster strikes, however, and you give the iced drink a sip.

...Huh. No taste, no stinging burn. Just cold, tasteless liquid. And it's rather nice with your dry, parched throat.

You hold off asking about Wakaba Mirai and ask about the drink instead. What is it?

"It's...it's water, sempai," Midori says, blinking, a bit unsure as to whether you were jerking her around or not. "Iced pure water." She says after a moment, and Kharn is similarly confused too.

Well, it's delicious. You should drink more of it.

"...Yes, well..." Kharn clears her throat. "What do you want to do, then, Murderface? Do you wish to interrogate this Magical Girl we captured some time ago, which had tried to kill all three of us with bears - or do you wish to do something else?" She glances at a wall clock, a digital display, near the ceiling. "We have some time before your flight back to Japan, I am thinking."

Flying back to Japan already? You were under the impression that you'd be training with her for a bit more.

"Yes, that was my thought too. But, ah, Kyuubey, you know how he is. He messaged last night, during procedure. Says he wants you back in Japan directly after the procedure. Had to call in a few favors to make sure you get stay here a bit longer than that, so you can recover."

Kharn blinks at you. "Well, ah, hmm. It will take a long time, I am sure, but I can probably give a quick summary, eh? Midori here can help fill the blanks, I think." She turns towards Midori, who nods eagerly, seemingly all but champing at the bit to. You follow her back to the elevator just as she sighs. "Ayah, this would have been much easier if Malal was still with us..."

Malal? Yet another name to add to the pile of people you've forgotten.

"Yes, yes, it is very sad. I will see what I can do." Kharn grumbles as she takes out her ID card. "SOUJI! Will be using Interrogation Room! Will be back in a little while!"

The young man's shouted reply is drowned out by the nearly-deafening shriek of metal grinding against metal as the lift doors slide shut. This time bringing all three of you up by a couple of floors (or at least, that's how it felt like).

By the time that the doors open once again, Midori and Kharn had given you a backstory that's a bit...less complete than you'd like. Apparently you're a Warmaster-in-training, now, a rank that meant that you were basically in charge of an entire legion of Magical Girls - a thousand of them - and that the only one ranking above you is the Incubator, pretty much. Your past hasn't been too kind to you, but you can easily tell that from how you've got all these aches and pains as you move - and you haven't been too kind to yourself, either, which you can tell by your voice. And your face. And the calluses on your hands.

Pretty much everything, really.

Midori is a bit more hesitant to talk about herself and her past, but what she tells you is enough: she was, in effect, someone who turned against her own Incubator and allied up with another. Wakaba Mirai was one of her former colleagues, sent her to take care of a green-haired loose end.

[1/2]

All three of you hunted her down in the snow-blanketed wilderness outside, and with a concerted effort you managed to leave her as carrion for the bears she seemed to be able to summon. Kharn, being her very interesting self, took her bleached skull - which she says, you should see sometime, along with the rest of her collection - and her soul gem.

You have the slightest inkling that they're leaving quite a lot out, but Kharn had said that your memory, as it is, will fill the blanks soon enough.

In any case, you're to interrogate Wakaba Mirai - or what's left of her - and see if there's anything new you could learn from her. Who sent her, and to confirm if it was indeed Midori that she came here for - and not something else you should know.

What the elevator doors open to is a small, cramped room, painted an antiseptic white. There is a single desk with an old-fashioned PC in the center, with one swiveling seat. The rather ancient-looking CPU tower beside the bulky CRT monitor bearing one strange soul gem-shaped slot at the front.

"This is the surrogate body for captured Magical Girls," Kharn says as she steps forward, her voice curiously stifled in the small, enclosed room. "We have thought of robotic bodies, you know, something like that to give them a face and motor movement and everything, but that always turned out bad." She reaches down to tap a claw on the mechanical keyboard, and there's a brief tingle of static as the monitor switches on, displaying a small blinking cursor at the very top of the screen.

"This limits their ability to do anything else other than talk. There," Kharn gestures with a claw to the tower's strange-shaped slot, "...is where you put the Soul Gem which you are to being interrogating of."

"...It looks...a bit low tech, kind of...?" Midori says after a moment, and you can't help but agree. Incubator technology amounts to a rig you probably won't be able to play anything on...?

"Oh, it just looks this way!" Kharn grins. "It is state of the art! Come on, try and see!"

She pulls the chair out for you to sit in, and you do so. It's comfortable enough, and Kharn drops an amber soul gem into your hand. A core of darkness swirling inside the gem.

"I'm not so sure about this, sempai..." The green-haired girl murmurs beside you.

Strangely, there's a faint clicking sound, somewhere inside the room. Like a clock, or a bomb. Well, probably not the latter, but...

"Ticking noise?" Both Kharn and Midori glance at each other in silence, before the russian shakes her head. "N...no, comrade, I do not hear any ticking. It is quiet, here, and I hear nothing except for our breathing." She sniffs a moment, before adding, "...and both your beating hearts, but that is another thing entirely. They are not in any way sounding like ticking. Midori? Do you hear it?"

"N-no, Miss Valnikov, I don't," Midori replies, shaking her own head as well. "I...Miss Valnikov, you can hear heartbeats? But how--"

"It is probably something like, ah, noise fatigue, I get them from wielding chainaxes for a while." Kharn cuts the green-haired girl off. "It is okay, Murderface. There is no ticking here, or if there is, you are the only one who is hearing it, in which case it is probably nothing." She grasps the top of your backrest and jiggles it a bit. "Come on, come on! We have interrogation to do!"

Kharn's dubious explanation aside - the chainaxes were indeed loud when she activated them, but it was barely a moment or so - you figure that the clicking noise is probably another one of your worn-out body's many foibles, a small one amidst the many presents that your past self has given you. You shake your head as you reach out carefully with Mirai's soul gem, and gingerly place it into the slot.

"Push until it clicks, comrade," Kharn advises, and you follow obediently, pushing against the Soul Gem with your thumb. There's a bit of resistance, before you hear the click, and the tower CPU whines in activation as the inserted Soul Gem glows a bright amber.

Immediately the once-blank screen suddenly flashes, and a torrent of code flashes past it. Some numbers, some characters, other things you've never seen before fill the small CRT monitor's void, scrolling past in breakneck speed. There's a crackle as the Soul Gem seems to almost rebel at this treatment, but ultimately it seems to bend its will to the strange machine - and the code clears itself after what sounds like a sigh brushing past your ears.

>WAKABA M.> Where...where am I? What is this? I know I'm supposed to be dead...
>USER>_

"Ah, there we are. It is success." Kharn grins. "Now, ah, you just type your question with keyboard, comrade, and then press Enter. It is like internet talking, only that there is only one girl here, and no sweaty man with beard on neck pretending to be girl. Or something like that, I have heard Souji talk about them." She nods at you, gesturing at the keyboard with a claw. "Go ahead! Is totally safe."

>WAKABA M> Who is this? What have you done to me? WHERE AM I?

"She is either panicking, or lying, or both," Kharn murmurs from above you, and you feel a warm, heavy sensation on the top of your head. "It always happens when we put them in the computer. It is a disturbing feeling, or so I am told."

You don't say, you manage to grumble despite the fact that Kharn is using you as a boob rest.

You try to ignore being used as a piece of furniture long enough to ask Kharn about the effectiveness of such an interrogation method. Shouldn't it be better to just put the captive Magical Girl in another body, instead of a machine like this? Without you able to discern if they're lying or not through their body language and expressions, then you're going to be stuck here for a long time, typing out questions that you will never get a real answer for.

"Ah, see, that is beauty of it." Kharn reaches out with one claw to gently tap on the glowing Soul Gem slotted in the tower CPU. "What we see here, the black screen, the white letters...it seems like nothing, when we are here, at the other side of it, right? Wakaba Mirai is in there," She then taps the screen of the monitor with an armored knuckle. "All she can perceive is darkness. All she can see are those letter, her words and yours. All your senses confined to that, you cannot feel or hear or see or taste or touch anything else."

A moment more, and she Kharn back from you finally - the warm weight on top of your head being removed as she straightens up. "It is a very unsettling and disturbing experience, like I have said. Many Magical Girls have been broken in mere minutes, and have never really recovered from it. Now, how can you lie when your entire being is reduced to this? It is very hard."

"That...but that's cruel..." Midori shakes her head, eyes wide. "To be trapped in that thing..."

"Cruel, but necessary." Kharn nods. "At the very least, it is a far cry from using knives, or bastinado, or anything as brutish. We get what we need, very quickly, without any lasting physical damage." A grin. "It should not surprise you at all that Kyuubey thought of this."

...Yes. You shouldn't be surprised. Not at all.

You narrow your eyes at that line, and for no reason at all - or at least, you think so - you feel this stab of absolute hatred at whoever typed it. Your hands curling over the keyboard, you don't even look at the keys anymore as you type out one word. One single word that had to be typed, a single message that needed typing.

>USER> dickbutt
>USER> dickbutt gtfo

"Uh, Murderface?" Kharn murmurs after a moment of all three of you watching the blinking cursor. "What is that being--" But you shush her immediately before she could complete her sentence, a focused anger inside you demanding that you are not to be disturbed. Kharn raises an eyebrow at you, but keeps quiet nonetheless.

A few more moments, and then a reply.

>10> I'm sorry, what?
>10> ...Cute. Yes. Name-calling. Very mature.
>USER> dickbutt gtfo

"Sempai, um, maybe we should try--" Midori starts, but you silence her with a glare. She shrinks back at this, and you turn back to the monitor.

>10>...Please let me talk to the current Warmaster.
>10> It's very important that we get to talk.
>10> And please, try to curb yourselves from the temptation of severing this connection.
>10> Should you do so by removing Wakaba Mirai's Soul Gem, it will detonate.
>10> Killing her, you, and whoever's in there with you. And everything else for a couple of miles.
>10> Let's try to be civil, for a change. I know how the Ninth Incubator's officers operate.
>10> Now, are you going to let me talk to the Warmaster or not?

Kharn laughs. "Hah! This guy, this guy! He is very funny, I am thinking!" She glances at the sparking Soul Gem set inside the tower. "Was just about to try and pull it out, too!"

...Well, is he bluffing, or is that something that could actually happen?

"I am not very sure! But, ah, it is very exciting, yes? Right, Midori?" There's a clank of metal as Kharn rests her hand on Midori's shoulder, the girl having gone quite pale. "Ah, but in any case, we can make a run for it! Elevator doors can withstand bomb explosion, you know!"

That's sort of reassuring.

"Although, if sensors detect explosion, doors may seal behind us to keep damage confined to this room only, instead of base. So, is hard to say either way!"

That's not reassuring at all.

"S-sempai, um...maybe you should talk to him..." Midori's voice is barely above a whisper, but you can see that she's scared.

Yes. Maybe. That's a good idea.

You do that, then. You forgo the name-calling for now.

>10> Your nomination was posted online even before my older brother broke the news to you, I bet.
>10> But even if there wasn't, I have enough personnel inside the Ninth Officio to know.
>10> Never mind Wakaba Mirai for the moment. Yes, she failed in her duty, but I was able to reach you, at least.
>10> In any case, shall we talk business? I'd like my Callidus back, please. They're very hard to find, nowadays.

You're not even looking at the keys anymore. You're...doing that thing where you can type even without looking at the keyes. And really quickly, too, your keystrokes as fast as they are light. Were you something of a shut-in during your past life, or something? Did you spend all day in your room, with the computer monitor your only source of light, warmth and companionship? Did you only step out at the middle of the night to do the assignments you got through email?

You blink as a vision of a young woman sitting in front of her laptop flashes past your eyes. She is in her pajamas, her long black hair tied into two long braids. The computer monitor reflected on the lenses of her red glasses. It's dark in her room, and she's bundled up in her futon's covers.

You shake your head, and continue to type. Must be fatigue from earlier setting in, or something...

All you see as you turn, though, is Midori looking away, blushing furiously.

"YES! It is second lesson as Warmaster, Murderface!" Kharn laughs as she pats your shoulder, more painfully than she probably meant to. "Being Warmaster means you are, like, owner of harem! You have all these girls, and you must make sure that they never set eyes on anyone else but you! You must be possessive, like an overzealous lover who will slit the throat of anyone who even dreams of laying a hand on one of your women!"

As you wait for a response, you tell Kharn about the possibility of this little interrogation turning completely ass-upwards, and ask her if she has any countermeasures you could use. She nods.

"Yes, okay. Ah...hmm." She brings out her smartphone and carefully taps at the screen. "I have notified Souji. He is alarmed, of course, but he is willing to permit use of our short-range teleporter to get us out of here in case of explosion. As soon as I tell him to, it will activate, and send us to safety."

A...short range teleporter? Well, now we're talking advanced. That's high-tech stuff, right there. You feel a bit safer--

"...Of course, it is a bit untested as of yet, so there is chance of us ending up somewhere we should not be. But is small chance!" Kharn holds the tips of a thumb claw and an index claw a hair's breadth apart. "Very small!"

No, safe feels are gone. No more safe feels.

This.

We're still in Mr. Bones' unholy amusement park. We've tasted the sweet nectar of carbonated sweet water and there's a thousand water fountains all around us, spraying jets up into the air. The ground is soaking wet, and the splashing is loud in our ears.

There are no bathrooms. We still have a lot of pain to go through before the exit ever appears.

By all rights, Midori should be dead. You would have discarded her. Yet now you discover that her captors have given her new purpose, and now you're objecting because you didn't have the foresight to plan for Midori's safety.

You did not make your intentions known before her turnover, and are now only voicing your objective. You were willing to write her off as a loss. Now, she is lost to you either way.

Incubators can always make more contracts, correct? Just go farm out other potentials for more Callidus. Perhaps you may even encounter a potential Culexus.

Before you type your response, Kharn grips your shoulder.

"Comrade, you are saying no, yes? You cannot seriously contemplate giving Midori over to another Incubator?"

You glance up at her, your eyes narrowed. What does she think?

"...Right." Kharn grins. "Midori, wait for us outside, in elevator." She looks down at her smartphone, tapping on its surface a few times. "The teleporter is set to bring us back next to you. Once we are there, get the elevator to the surface. Do not delay, okay?" Kharn hands a black plastic keycard to the green-haired girl, who nods, swallowing audibly. "We may be unconscious, or something strange, when we reappear, but no matter what you go up! Surface!"

"R-right. To the surface, Miss Valnikov." Midori nods, an expression of determination set on her face. "Sempai, please take care, a-and...and thank you."

You hear her footsteps recede behind you, followed by the creak of the elevator doors opening for her.

"Right. This is suicidal, you know."

Of course.

"We may die, comrade."

You're aware of that.

"You, ah, really like her, then? It is like you to speak like this to an Incubator, but to be so protective of someone else...well, it is new."

You hope it doesn't get to be a habit.

"Hah! Right. Well, whenever you are ready, comrade."

You turn back towards the screen, and type out your last message to the Tenth Incubator.

As soon as you press return do you reach out and grasp the sparking Soul Gem, ignoring the brief sting of electricity as your fingers close over the jewel. With luck, you'll be able to rip the Soul Gem out and kill the connection before Jyuubey can do anything.

You've barely started to pull when you see the screen flicker again.

>WAKABA M.> NO PLEASE NO
>WAKABA M.> PLEASE I WANT TO GO HOME
>WAKABA M.> MIDORI PLEASE DON'T LET ME DIE
>WAKABA M.> JYUUBEY PLEASE

It's then that you hear it. The clicking. It had softened to a barely noticeable murmur earlier, but now it was practically deafening. A rapid, fevered clicking. Not a bomb, or a clock. Something...something with clockwork. Gears grinding against each other. Straining. Gnashing.

You feel a heavy weight on your arm, and you blink at the scarred, circular Shield that had suddenly appeared there, clamped securely. You've never seen it before, but you feel like you should have.

You look up to see the monitor filling with words, crying out for help again and again. Then just letters. Numbers. Jumbled nonsense. One sentence seems to flicker at you from all the chaos, however.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

>>21824653

The concussive bang of teleportation almost knocked you out, but somehow you stayed conscious.

Half-blind, - the teleportation itself erupted in front of you like a bomb, barely giving you enough time to shield your eyes - you crawl towards the groaning form at the floor of the elevator. You don't forget your duties, of course - you all but nearly break something as you force the lift to go up, up, up. To safety. Back to the surface.

"Sempai?" You try, reaching out to grab something. A hand, a shoulder. Please let them be safe. "Sempai, are you--"

What you grab is cold metal, instead. You feel yourself go even colder as you hear Kharn's whisper.

"Murderface is still in there. She was left behind."

"WITCH DETECTED. WITCH DETECTED IN PREMISES. ALERT. WITCH DETECTED--"

You are a Magical Girl.

I don't think Jyubey was one for negotiating. He seems like the smarmy type who bandies around authority just because he can. Even if we were diplomatic, I don't think he would have let Midori go. Seems like more an issue of pride rather than for Midori's usefulness as a Callidus.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you've just survived a training session with Kharn the Betrayer. You have the feeling that you're lucky to be alive, and very, very lucky to be intact.

All thanks to the voices in your head - and a rather tan-skinned young woman whose soul seems to be bound in two golden bangles that turn into huge robot fists. Each the size of a Volkswagen Beetle perched on its fender, and each able to deliver the sheer impact of a battleship broadside in the form of punches.

You're not even sure how Kharn survived a solid hit like that earlier, she should've been reduced to paste with a straight like that. You even felt something crack on impact, but she looks fine - well, besides the bruises she got.

In any case, you're coming away from this experience with a new friend, two rather ostentatious-looking accessories clasped around your wrists, and...well, a couple of holes on the shoulder of your costume, from where Kharn's chainaxe had scored you. Yuu, your new friend, had taken care of the flesh wounds, but it doesn't seem like she could perform similar miracles on cloth.

And sane.

Somewhat.

Hopefully.

You're still getting used to having regular-sized hands without autocannons hiding inside each of your metal-plated fingers when you and your little group - namely Midori and Kharn - manage to make it back to the living quarters. You hear Souji in the kitchen, talking to the...child from earlier, it sounds like. Their voices low, subdued - at least in Souji's case, that is. The child - you remember her name is Misaka - seems close to tears as it is, with that crackling slurriness that children always get whenever they're an inch to crying their eyes out.

Pity you can't understand Russian. Kharn seems to be able to, however, and you see a twinge of emotion cross the face that had been grinning at you with a rather frightening bloodlust earlier. It's almost amusing, how someone who could be so monstrous could also be...human.

"...Ah." You hear Kharn murmur, shaking her head. "Misaka is still trying to get over the fact that...you are not the Murderface she loves." The woman smiles at you with a smile resembling one of guilt, and shrugs her bare shoulders. "...I am very sorry, Murderface. This is the last thing you need, I think."

You shake your head. Not her fault, it couldn't exactly be helped.

"...Yes, well, I--"

"Murderface!"

A sharp cry from the kitchen silences Kharn, and a patter of footsteps turn your head towards the door leading to the small room - and you see the child from earlier standing there, looking up at you with eyes reddened from too much crying. Before you can move, she runs towards you, full out, her lab coat flying out from behind her. She nearly bears you to the floor as she throws her hands around your waist, burying her face into your stomach.

The sound of her crying pitifully into your costume is muffled, and yet you could hear her murmuring your name in between sobs.

"Sempai, um..." You hear Midori beside you. "Do...do you want me to take care of Misaka-chan?" You turn to see her pained expression at the girl's crying. "I'm not as good with her as you were, but I could..."

What do you do?

You turn towards Kharn and Midori, nodding at them each in turn, and they seem to understand your unspoken message well enough. Kharn excuses herself by making her way where the living quarters' rooms should be; Midori murmurs something about getting you something to drink as she quietly moves to the kitchen. You could use a drink, yes; that sparring match with a blade-limbed demon had taken quite a bit out of you, and you suddenly feel a thirst that needs quenching quickly.

With the both of you left alone there, you carefully lift a bangled hand - the golden band glinting in the glow of the fluorescent lighting above you - and it's gently, gingerly, that you pat her on the head. Smoothing the thick, soft brown hair of the young woman currently soaking your costume with her tears.

She shivers palpably at your touch, and you feel her arms curl around you a bit more tightly, and you take that as a sign that you haven't messed it up completely. You resume with the affectionate gesture, running your fingers through her hair, and after a while she rewards your patience with a small hiccup, as well as a brief hiatus on the waterworks.

"Murderface forgot Misaka," She murmurs, her voice hoarse. "Murderface broke her promise! Murderface promised she would never forget Misaka whatever...h-happens!"

You brush some of her hair away from her face and eyes, the strands matted to her skin with her sweat and tears, and you try your best to frame...an apology for your current situation. No, you don't have an idea what got you into this situation, nor you remember anything prior from waking up, but...clearly, your past self had promised her something that you can't keep. Not at your state.

But you're sorry, you murmur, holding her gaze. You don't like apologizing for things that's not necessarily your fault, but you'll apologize to her. And you'll try your best to keep your promise this time.

"Y-you won't forget Misaka again?" She asks, holding you tighter. "Really...?"

No. You won't forget her. And to make it official...you're swear it on your new name. Not Murderface, but Chiaki Matsuda.

"Chiaki...?" Misaka repeats the name, a few times, as if trying to get used to it.

You nod. No more calling you Murderface. Murderface, whoever she was, is gone. You're not her, and while you won't try to replace her, you'll try to be just as good as...as...

You look around, and see Kharn, dabbing a towel into her wet hair - she looks like she'd jumped into a shower briefly, and was now back into her regular clothes - and she silently mouths two words at you.

"Big...Big Sister Chiaki?" Now, Misaka's eyes are wide, seemingly amazed, forgetting what had made her cry in the first place. "Murderface will be my big sister...?"

You manage a nod at this, and you try to manage what should look like a small smile. A big sister. Exactly.

She squeals at this, jumping up and reaching up at you with both hands. You find yourself made to bow down slightly as she pulls your neck towards her - and you feel a soft pair of lips press against your cheek. "Big Sister! Misaka has a big sister, now! Misaka has to tell useless big brother who is dumb also!"

You manage to straighten up just as she all but scampers back to the kitchen. A surprised shriek from Midori, and a shout of astonishment from Souji heralds her arrival - and you hear her babbling in excited Russian. You also hear Souji's grumbling replies.

"Big sister Murderface," Kharn grins as she continues to squeeze water from her freshly-washed hair. "Would never have thought to see the day, or hear of such a thing. Maybe this amnesia is a good thing, after all, eh?" She chuckles, but waves a placating hand as you frown at her. "Was joke. Really. Amnesia is bad, but...you are very kind, at least, to give yourself that role. Or did you simply want to get her to shut up with a sincere lie?"

"...Well, it is not like I do not approve, or anything..." Kharn finishes wringing her hair of water, before giving her scalp a careful scrub. "But be careful what you are hoping to do, eh, Murderface? After all, we are no longer what we appear to be." She reaches into a pocket of her lab coat with a free clawed hand - and it's with a clink of her skeletal claws that she tosses something at your direction. A bauble, no bigger than a small egg, glowing with a smoky purple light. You catch the object easily in your hand, feeling a cold weight on your palm as your fingers close upon it.

"We are the Blessed Lady's Chosen, and we are the last people to make that kind of promises."

It's your Soul Gem. That much is clear.

But it's nothing like you remember.

Or at least, what you should remember. Soul Gems aren't supposed to have the brass gilding protecting the gemstone to be totally black, reminiscent of a Grief Seed. The jewel shouldn't be so dark, either, with what looks to be a small tongue of violet fire flickering at the very center of it, seemingly warding off the darkness trying to engulf it from all around.

Nor it should have the roman numeral VIII written in gold at the very base of it.

"It is what happens. An outcome of the procedure. I believe it is harmless, as I also have something similar on mine. Maybe it is ostentation, maybe it is a mark of the Chosen." Kharn shrugs. "They do match the Golden Weapon you are given, I find. Mine has the same numeral as the chainaxes earlier, so maybe it is that."

Maybe. You flex your fingers carefully, and the Soul Gem disappears in a small gout of purple flame - one that leaps from your palm and onto the back of your right hand. Manifesting there as a nearly-flat diamond of the same darkened amethyst, gilded with gold.

At least it still works. That's some consolation.

"Alright..." Kharn begins just as Midori exits from the kitchen, a glass of some clear liquid at hand, ice cubes clinking inside along with her movement. "If you are feeling up to it, we can do interrogation with Wakaba Mirai now, I am thinking. We have let her rest for a while, already." At the russian's words, Midori very nearly tips the glass as she passes it to you, seemingly taken off-guard by the name you don't exactly recognize. You manage to take the glass before disaster strikes, however, and you give the iced drink a sip.

...Huh. No taste, no stinging burn. Just cold, tasteless liquid. And it's rather nice with your dry, parched throat.

You hold off asking about Wakaba Mirai and ask about the drink instead. What is it?

"It's...it's water, sempai," Midori says, blinking, a bit unsure as to whether you were jerking her around or not. "Iced pure water." She says after a moment, and Kharn is similarly confused too.

Well, it's delicious. You should drink more of it.

"...Yes, well..." Kharn clears her throat. "What do you want to do, then, Murderface? Do you wish to interrogate this Magical Girl we captured some time ago, which had tried to kill all three of us with bears - or do you wish to do something else?" She glances at a wall clock, a digital display, near the ceiling. "We have some time before your flight back to Japan, I am thinking."

Flying back to Japan already? You were under the impression that you'd be training with her for a bit more.

"Yes, that was my thought too. But, ah, Kyuubey, you know how he is. He messaged last night, during procedure. Says he wants you back in Japan directly after the procedure. Had to call in a few favors to make sure you get stay here a bit longer than that, so you can recover."

Kharn blinks at you. "Well, ah, hmm. It will take a long time, I am sure, but I can probably give a quick summary, eh? Midori here can help fill the blanks, I think." She turns towards Midori, who nods eagerly, seemingly all but champing at the bit to. You follow her back to the elevator just as she sighs. "Ayah, this would have been much easier if Malal was still with us..."

Malal? Yet another name to add to the pile of people you've forgotten.

"Yes, yes, it is very sad. I will see what I can do." Kharn grumbles as she takes out her ID card. "SOUJI! Will be using Interrogation Room! Will be back in a little while!"

The young man's shouted reply is drowned out by the nearly-deafening shriek of metal grinding against metal as the lift doors slide shut. This time bringing all three of you up by a couple of floors (or at least, that's how it felt like).

By the time that the doors open once again, Midori and Kharn had given you a backstory that's a bit...less complete than you'd like. Apparently you're a Warmaster-in-training, now, a rank that meant that you were basically in charge of an entire legion of Magical Girls - a thousand of them - and that the only one ranking above you is the Incubator, pretty much. Your past hasn't been too kind to you, but you can easily tell that from how you've got all these aches and pains as you move - and you haven't been too kind to yourself, either, which you can tell by your voice. And your face. And the calluses on your hands.

Pretty much everything, really.

Midori is a bit more hesitant to talk about herself and her past, but what she tells you is enough: she was, in effect, someone who turned against her own Incubator and allied up with another. Wakaba Mirai was one of her former colleagues, sent her to take care of a green-haired loose end.

All three of you hunted her down in the snow-blanketed wilderness outside, and with a concerted effort you managed to leave her as carrion for the bears she seemed to be able to summon. Kharn, being her very interesting self, took her bleached skull - which she says, you should see sometime, along with the rest of her collection - and her soul gem.

You have the slightest inkling that they're leaving quite a lot out, but Kharn had said that your memory, as it is, will fill the blanks soon enough.

In any case, you're to interrogate Wakaba Mirai - or what's left of her - and see if there's anything new you could learn from her. Who sent her, and to confirm if it was indeed Midori that she came here for - and not something else you should know.

What the elevator doors open to is a small, cramped room, painted an antiseptic white. There is a single desk with an old-fashioned PC in the center, with one swiveling seat. The rather ancient-looking CPU tower beside the bulky CRT monitor bearing one strange soul gem-shaped slot at the front.

"This is the surrogate body for captured Magical Girls," Kharn says as she steps forward, her voice curiously stifled in the small, enclosed room. "We have thought of robotic bodies, you know, something like that to give them a face and motor movement and everything, but that always turned out bad." She reaches down to tap a claw on the mechanical keyboard, and there's a brief tingle of static as the monitor switches on, displaying a small blinking cursor at the very top of the screen.

"This limits their ability to do anything else other than talk. There," Kharn gestures with a claw to the tower's strange-shaped slot, "...is where you put the Soul Gem which you are to being interrogating of."

"...It looks...a bit low tech, kind of...?" Midori says after a moment, and you can't help but agree. Incubator technology amounts to a rig you probably won't be able to play anything on...?

"Oh, it just looks this way!" Kharn grins. "It is state of the art! Come on, try and see!"

She pulls the chair out for you to sit in, and you do so. It's comfortable enough, and Kharn drops an amber soul gem into your hand. A core of darkness swirling inside the gem.

"I'm not so sure about this, sempai..." The green-haired girl murmurs beside you.

Strangely, there's a faint clicking sound, somewhere inside the room. Like a clock, or a bomb. Well, probably not the latter, but...

"Ticking noise?" Both Kharn and Midori glance at each other in silence, before the russian shakes her head. "N...no, comrade, I do not hear any ticking. It is quiet, here, and I hear nothing except for our breathing." She sniffs a moment, before adding, "...and both your beating hearts, but that is another thing entirely. They are not in any way sounding like ticking. Midori? Do you hear it?"

"N-no, Miss Valnikov, I don't," Midori replies, shaking her own head as well. "I...Miss Valnikov, you can hear heartbeats? But how--"

"It is probably something like, ah, noise fatigue, I get them from wielding chainaxes for a while." Kharn cuts the green-haired girl off. "It is okay, Murderface. There is no ticking here, or if there is, you are the only one who is hearing it, in which case it is probably nothing." She grasps the top of your backrest and jiggles it a bit. "Come on, come on! We have interrogation to do!"

Kharn's dubious explanation aside - the chainaxes were indeed loud when she activated them, but it was barely a moment or so - you figure that the clicking noise is probably another one of your worn-out body's many foibles, a small one amidst the many presents that your past self has given you. You shake your head as you reach out carefully with Mirai's soul gem, and gingerly place it into the slot.

"Push until it clicks, comrade," Kharn advises, and you follow obediently, pushing against the Soul Gem with your thumb. There's a bit of resistance, before you hear the click, and the tower CPU whines in activation as the inserted Soul Gem glows a bright amber.

Immediately the once-blank screen suddenly flashes, and a torrent of code flashes past it. Some numbers, some characters, other things you've never seen before fill the small CRT monitor's void, scrolling past in breakneck speed. There's a crackle as the Soul Gem seems to almost rebel at this treatment, but ultimately it seems to bend its will to the strange machine - and the code clears itself after what sounds like a sigh brushing past your ears.

>WAKABA M.> Where...where am I? What is this? I know I'm supposed to be dead...
>USER>_

"Ah, there we are. It is success." Kharn grins. "Now, ah, you just type your question with keyboard, comrade, and then press Enter. It is like internet talking, only that there is only one girl here, and no sweaty man with beard on neck pretending to be girl. Or something like that, I have heard Souji talk about them." She nods at you, gesturing at the keyboard with a claw. "Go ahead! Is totally safe."

>USER> You are not dead. Not yet.
>USER> What were your orders? How did you find us?

You press the Enter key, the button clicking solidly as you do so. Your message sent.

You didn't have to wait long for the blinking cursor to spit out Wakaba Mirai's response.

>WAKABA M> I...I was supposed to bring Midori-chan back. That's what I remember.
>WAKABA M> I was ordered to bring her back in one piece.
>WAKABA M> I didn't know she had the Ninth Warmaster with her, so I tried to scare them off.
>WAKABA M>The bears here were...strange. I could control them just fine, but they were...wilder, more bloodthirsty than the ones I'm used to. Tainted with something, I'm not sure.
>WAKABA M> I needed to get Midori-chan back, but...I...I remember being killed by a monster.
>WAKABA M> Not a Witch. A monster. Something different. I...
>WAKABA M> Who is this? What have you done to me? WHERE AM I?

"She is either panicking, or lying, or both," Kharn murmurs from above you, and you feel a warm, heavy sensation on the top of your head. "It always happens when we put them in the computer. It is a disturbing feeling, or so I am told."

You don't say, you manage to grumble despite the fact that Kharn is using you as a boob rest.

You try to ignore being used as a piece of furniture long enough to ask Kharn about the effectiveness of such an interrogation method. Shouldn't it be better to just put the captive Magical Girl in another body, instead of a machine like this? Without you able to discern if they're lying or not through their body language and expressions, then you're going to be stuck here for a long time, typing out questions that you will never get a real answer for.

"Ah, see, that is beauty of it." Kharn reaches out with one claw to gently tap on the glowing Soul Gem slotted in the tower CPU. "What we see here, the black screen, the white letters...it seems like nothing, when we are here, at the other side of it, right? Wakaba Mirai is in there," She then taps the screen of the monitor with an armored knuckle. "All she can perceive is darkness. All she can see are those letter, her words and yours. All your senses confined to that, you cannot feel or hear or see or taste or touch anything else."

A moment more, and she Kharn back from you finally - the warm weight on top of your head being removed as she straightens up. "It is a very unsettling and disturbing experience, like I have said. Many Magical Girls have been broken in mere minutes, and have never really recovered from it. Now, how can you lie when your entire being is reduced to this? It is very hard."

"That...but that's cruel..." Midori shakes her head, eyes wide. "To be trapped in that thing..."

"Cruel, but necessary." Kharn nods. "At the very least, it is a far cry from using knives, or bastinado, or anything as brutish. We get what we need, very quickly, without any lasting physical damage." A grin. "It should not surprise you at all that Kyuubey thought of this."

...Yes. You shouldn't be surprised. Not at all.

"Sempai, um, maybe we should try--" Midori starts, but you silence her with a glare. She shrinks back at this, and you turn back to the monitor.

>10>...Please let me talk to the current Warmaster.
>10> It's very important that we get to talk.
>10> And please, try to curb yourselves from the temptation of severing this connection.
>10> Should you do so by removing Wakaba Mirai's Soul Gem, it will detonate.
>10> Killing her, you, and whoever's in there with you. And everything else for a couple of miles.
>10> Let's try to be civil, for a change. I know how the Ninth Incubator's officers operate.

Kharn laughs. "Hah! This guy, this guy! He is very funny, I am thinking!" She glances at the sparking Soul Gem set inside the tower. "Was just about to try and pull it out, too!"

...Well, is he bluffing, or is that something that could actually happen?

"I am not very sure! But, ah, it is very exciting, yes? Right, Midori?" There's a clank of metal as Kharn rests her hand on Midori's shoulder, the girl having gone quite pale. "Ah, but in any case, we can make a run for it! Elevator doors can withstand bomb explosion, you know!"

That's sort of reassuring.

"Although, if sensors detect explosion, doors may seal behind us to keep damage confined to this room only, instead of base. So, is hard to say either way!"

That's not reassuring at all.

"S-sempai, um...maybe you should talk to him..." Midori's voice is barely above a whisper, but you can see that she's scared.

Yes. Maybe. That's a good idea.

You do that, then. You forgo the name-calling for now.

You're not even looking at the keys anymore. You're...doing that thing where you can type even without looking at the keyes. And really quickly, too, your keystrokes as fast as they are light. Were you something of a shut-in during your past life, or something? Did you spend all day in your room, with the computer monitor your only source of light, warmth and companionship? Did you only step out at the middle of the night to do the assignments you got through email?

You blink as a vision of a young woman sitting in front of her laptop flashes past your eyes. She is in her pajamas, her long black hair tied into two long braids. The computer monitor reflected on the lenses of her red glasses. It's dark in her room, and she's bundled up in her futon's covers.

You shake your head, and continue to type. Must be fatigue from earlier setting in, or something...

As you wait for a response, you tell Kharn about the possibility of this little interrogation turning completely ass-upwards, and ask her if she has any countermeasures you could use. She nods.

"Yes, okay. Ah...hmm." She brings out her smartphone and carefully taps at the screen. "I have notified Souji. He is alarmed, of course, but he is willing to permit use of our short-range teleporter to get us out of here in case of explosion. As soon as I tell him to, it will activate, and send us to safety."

A...short range teleporter? Well, now we're talking advanced. That's high-tech stuff, right there. You feel a bit safer--

"...Of course, it is a bit untested as of yet, so there is chance of us ending up somewhere we should not be. But is small chance!" Kharn holds the tips of a thumb claw and an index claw a hair's breadth apart. "Very small!"

No, safe feels are gone. No more safe feels.

By all rights, Midori should be dead. You would have discarded her. Yet now you discover that her captors have given her new purpose, and now you're objecting because you didn't have the foresight to plan for Midori's safety.

You did not make your intentions known before her turnover, and are now only voicing your objective. You were willing to write her off as a loss. Now, she is lost to you either way.

Incubators can always make more contracts, correct? Just go farm out other potentials for more Callidus. Perhaps you may even encounter a potential Culexus.

Before you type your response, Kharn grips your shoulder.

"Comrade, you are saying no, yes? You cannot seriously contemplate giving Midori over to another Incubator?"

You glance up at her, your eyes narrowed. What does she think?

"...Right." Kharn grins. "Midori, wait for us outside, in elevator." She looks down at her smartphone, tapping on its surface a few times. "The teleporter is set to bring us back next to you. Once we are there, get the elevator to the surface. Do not delay, okay?" Kharn hands a black plastic keycard to the green-haired girl, who nods, swallowing audibly. "We may be unconscious, or something strange, when we reappear, but no matter what you go up! Surface!"

"R-right. To the surface, Miss Valnikov." Midori nods, an expression of determination set on her face. "Sempai, please take care, a-and...and thank you."

You hear her footsteps recede behind you, followed by the creak of the elevator doors opening for her.

"Right. This is suicidal, you know."

Of course.

"We may die, comrade."

You're aware of that.

"You, ah, really like her, then? It is like you to speak like this to an Incubator, but to be so protective of someone else...well, it is new."

You hope it doesn't get to be a habit.

"Hah! Right. Well, whenever you are ready, comrade."

You turn back towards the screen, and type out your last message to the Tenth Incubator.

As soon as you press return do you reach out and grasp the sparking Soul Gem, ignoring the brief sting of electricity as your fingers close over the jewel. With luck, you'll be able to rip the Soul Gem out and kill the connection before Jyuubey can do anything.

You've barely started to pull when you see the screen flicker again.

>WAKABA M.> NO PLEASE NO
>WAKABA M.> PLEASE I WANT TO GO HOME
>WAKABA M.> MIDORI PLEASE DON'T LET ME DIE
>WAKABA M.> JYUUBEY PLEASE

It's then that you hear it. The clicking. It had softened to a barely noticeable murmur earlier, but now it was practically deafening. A rapid, fevered clicking. Not a bomb, or a clock. Something...something with clockwork. Gears grinding against each other. Straining. Gnashing.

You feel a heavy weight on your arm, and you blink at the scarred, circular Shield that had suddenly appeared there, clamped securely. You've never seen it before, but you feel like you should have.

You look up to see the monitor filling with words, crying out for help again and again. Then just letters. Numbers. Jumbled nonsense. One sentence seems to flicker at you from all the chaos, however.

The Witch's cackling fills your ears as it swallows up the entire room in darkness - and the last thing you see, besides the flare-bright explosion of Kharn's teleportation - is Mirai's bloody, eyeless face bearing down on you.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

>>21824653

The concussive bang of teleportation almost knocked you out, but somehow you stayed conscious.

Half-blind, - the teleportation itself erupted in front of you like a bomb, barely giving you enough time to shield your eyes - you crawl towards the groaning form at the floor of the elevator. You don't forget your duties, of course - you all but nearly break something as you force the lift to go up, up, up. To safety. Back to the surface.

"Sempai?" You try, reaching out to grab something. A hand, a shoulder. Please let them be safe. "Sempai, are you--"

What you grab is cold metal, instead. You feel yourself go even colder as you hear Kharn's whisper.

"WITCH DETECTED. WITCH DETECTED IN PREMISES. ALERT. WITCH DETECTED--"

You are a Magical Girl.

Probably, but the whole exchange really cracked me up, so I'd say it was worth it on one level or another. Unless Chiaki dies. Which...seems to be a possibility.

Anyway, I can't really see an outcome in which we would actually willingly give Midori up, so I'm not sure what we could have done aside from at least make it civil.

Oh god, the next Thread will be in Midori-Vision.

I enjoy greatly how Chiaki seems to be slightly different than Murderface and that she seems to see her past self as pretty conterproductive.
I am a bit sad about the fact that we failed to rescue Mirai, though with us acting retarded instead of diplomatic it makes sense. On the other hand, trying to take our Midori is a no-no.

I don't think Jyubey was one for negotiating. He seems like the smarmy type who bandies around authority just because he can. Even if we were diplomatic, I don't think he would have let Midori go. Seems like more an issue of pride rather than for Midori's usefulness as a Callidus.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

Your name is Hanegawa Midori. You have your mother's green hair, and your father's red eyes. You absolutely detest the sight and scent of instant noodles, and have very nearly come to blows with a former colleague who had the gall to compare the junk to an honest-to-goodness homemade bowl of ramen. You are your father's only daughter. All your brothers have followed in his footsteps, and the less said about them the better.

Your wish was a stupid one, and you always cringe at the memory of it. You made that wish on your fifteenth birthday, two years ago, and you've always regretted it.

You are rank Callidus, and you have never killed anyone in your brief tour of service. You've always lied about that to everyone. Including her.

It's not that you're afraid to, or never had the opportunity.

You just didn't want blood on your hands, that's all. You didn't want to add someone's death to your mounting pile of sins.

Yes, you're fully aware that gives anyone - including her - free license to call you a host of dreadful names. Hypocrite being one of them.

Names well deserved. You won't deny that.

>>21931774

You don't remember much after the...incident. It's a blur of red light, panic, with the alarm klaxons screaming in your ear. You found yourself helping a hobbling Kharn back into the living quarters floor, the former Warmaster coughing up horrible amounts of black blood. The sirens have yet to stop ringing in your ears, even though they're muffled in the living quarters itself. Sirens - and the faint echo of who you recognize as Chiaki screaming.

Souji is the first to greet you, his face ashen, grim. He takes the stricken Valnikov off your hands, and it's a slight relief. Kharn was as heavy as her metallic limbs made her look, and you were not trained to haul someone as . For someone shorter and slighter than the former Warmaster, he is able to carry her to a nearby couch.

She is incoherent, desperate, not at all herself. She is half-mumbling, half-growling in Russian, in English, in Japanese. Sometimes she talks in a language you have never heard before- and from how each syllable seemed to rasp deep in her throat, it is not something you want to hear again.

You force yourself not to grab her by the throat and throttle her. You force yourself not to get carried away. You want to ask what happened in that room, before the worst came to be. You want to ask her what kind of lunacy drove the both of them - former and present Warmaster - to even consider doing something so idiotic with a Soul Gem.

"Kharn. Kharn, please focus. Please." Souji is pleading with her now, hands grasping her shoulders. "Focus! What happened? We need to know, if we're going to get Matsuda out of there. Kharn, please--"

There's a clank of metal, and Souji stops as he sees a black fleshmetal hand wrap around his wrist.

"The...the Blessed Lady is displeased," The black-haired former Warmaster babbles, her black, crimson-pinned eyes wide and staring. "She is displeasd with the heresy we've committed upon her Chosen. She is trying to take her back. The Incubator's meddling proved to be a timely distraction...to bring the Chosen back to the Eightfold Path."

She's spouting nonsense. You don't even understand it.

Behind you, you hear Misaka calling your name, calling Souji's. She does not call Kharn.

What do you do?

[]Slap Kharn. Get her to say something you understand.
[]Ask Souji what you need to do. Every moment you spend here is every moment Chiaki spends trapped in that room with that monster.

Decu estimated that MGNQ qould be finished up some time in January, and he's been pretty solid with his progression through the story so far given the amount of work involved and the amount of distractions from REAL WORLD on his end. MGNQ will at least not have any problems with reaching its conclusion, I think.

You bite back the urge to give the delirious russian a slap. While it would definitely be satisfying - you haven't really liked how she could be so carefree, so easygoing, with Chiaki's situation - you didn't think you had time to indulge in something like that. She probably wouldn't approve, either, when you finally manage to rescue her. Not if, but when.

Instead, you ask Souji about what needs to be done. What the options in this situation are. Surely, with a base like this, they'd have contingencies for just about any situation, right? The base is prepared for something like this, isn't it?

"What the hell do you think?" Souji snaps at you, an ugly scowl contorting his features - and it's then that he turns away, reaching up to clamp his hand over his eyes. "Y-yes. Sorry about that. Yes. Right." He takes his hand away and turns back to you. "The Interrogation Room as it is now is sealed. We've got wards activated along the walls and doors; the Witch won't be able to escape or spread its Barrier beyond the boundaries of the room itself. It's sealed in."

Right. Along with Chiaki. He has a plan to get her out, right? Something in this facility should be able to pluck her out of that room and into safety, right?

Right?

"No." Souji shakes his head. "We don't. The short-range teleporter was supposed to do that, but something kept Matsuda back. Something didn't want her to leave." He looks back at Kharn, who seems to be crying blood now. He has taken off his lab coat and was now using it to keep her face clean. "Jesus Christ, Kharn. Don't do this. Not now."

>>21932079

What can you do now, then? How can you get Chiaki out? Can't he try and teleport her out of that mess?

"If she was still in the room, yes," Souji replies. "She's in the Witch Barrier now. Getting a teleportation lock on her would be impossible. I know, I've tried it once." He swallows audibly as he continues to try and keep Kharn's face clean of the evil-smelling blood trickling out of her eyes. "There's only one way - someone to teleport in and dispatch the Witch from inside. That'll deactivate the barrier and we'll be able to get Chiaki out."

That's...that's the only way?

"If you've got a better idea, I'm all ears. The failsafe against these things, I'm trying to make sure that she doesn't go berserk like the last time." He gestures at Kharn, useless and babbling and crying.

...That's just swell. Really.

"Yeah, it's perfect. I know, right?"

It's then that you feel a small hand tugging at your sleeve, and you turn to look at Misaka.

"Big Sister Murderface is in trouble, Misaka will help," The brown-haired girl says, a strange light glinting in her eyes. "...Misaka will teleport inside Witch Barrier and save Big Sister! Misaka will do it, guaranteed!"

"Misaka, don't be stupid--"

"QUIET, USELESS OLDER BROTHER! MISAKA WILL PROVE HERE THAT SHE IS SMARTER AND BETTER THAN YOU! TINY PETE WILL HELP MISAKA RESCUE BIG SISTER!"

How do you respond?

You look at Misaka, and shake your head briefly, a small smile on your face. You haven't really asked your sempai just what had happened between her and Misaka for both of them to have such a bond, such a connection. Whatever it was, it must've been something, to inspire this little girl - a little girl with a robot, but a little girl nonetheless - to be so ready to jump into the jaws of death to save your unreliable sempai that she pre-empted you.

You're supposed to be the creepy, obsessed fangirl here, and you're being upstaged by a cute russian girl with the barest grasp of grammar and syntax. You should be ashamed, Hanegawa Midori. Ashamed.

You put a stop to the beginnings of a shouting match between siblings by placing your hands on Misaka's shoulders. From what you've learned of Chiaki, Misaka wanted to be talked to as an equal - but at the same time, she loathed being patronized. She wanted you to talk to her as a person, not as a liability. She'd worked hard enough to prove that she was anything but.

You tell her that Big Sister Murderface, as ill-mannered as she was, would not forgive you for letting Misaka endanger herself. Big Sister Murderface would certainly not like it if her younger sister was hurt in your rescue attempt, and you would be out of a job then. Worse, Big Sister Murderface would probably hurt you.

"N-no! Big Sister Murderface wouldn't do something like that!" Misaka shakes her head furiously. "B-besides, Tiny Pete will protect Misaka, and--"

He SG splinters, turns into a GS who in turn breaks and blooms into her witch.
Kinda like Uranium leaves behind lead or wood leaves behind coal.

In addition to that, it stands to reason that even WITH plot-induced stupidity some MG would have tried that in the past.

You glance at Kharn, then back at Misaka, before making your decision. It's...you wish you could have had more time to decide, to think things through, but time is a luxury you don't quite have. Not with your sempai in this...literal worst-case scenario.

You'll be going alone, you tell both Misaka and Souji. It's the most logical decision at the moment. Misaka going in with you is right out. Having Tiny Pete with you at the outset would certainly help, but you're worried that his presence would draw too much attention early in the search for your sempai. Kharn, well...what is happening to her, anyway?

"I'll explain when you get back." Souji pulls out what looks to be a syringe of silver liquid from the depths of his coat. With clean, practiced movements, he injects the fluid directly into Kharn's neck, and immediately the cringing, sobbing former Warmaster seems to relax. Seems to slacken. "I'll have to get her into a Silent Room soon. She'll be alright, but she needs time to recover."

"B-but Tiny Pete can still help...!"

Is there some way you could signal for Tiny Pete to teleport to you, once you've found Chiaki? Or just to bail you out in case you find yourself compromised?

"Y-yes! Misaka has teleport beacon! Misaka will give you personal one!" She pulls back the sleeve of her lab coat to reveal a rather bulky digital watch, the sort you'd see kids wear. She nearly tears it off to give it to you. "J-just press this button, and Tiny Pete will be there in two seconds!"

Can Tiny Pete teleport out of a Witch Barrier himself? Can he take people with him?

"Misaka...Misaka hasn't really tested it," Misaka says after a moment, sheepish. "Do not have the opportunity yet. B-but, maybe, um...if Tiny Pete has a passenger inside, just one, teleportation can work. B-but have not tested it inside Witch Barrier..."

But it could work? Theoretically?

"Theoretically, it...it should," The young woman is clearly hesitant to answer. "But, it could be too dangerous--"

"Don't try it, is what she's trying to say." Souji cuts in. "Don't try to be a hero. Get in, waste that Witch, get back out. That's what Magical Girls are for, aren't they?"

Well, yes, but--

"STUPID SOUJI! WAS EXPLAINING! TINY PETE IS MINE!"

Alright, alright, there's no need to shout. You distract Misaka from another shouting match by asking her to help you put on the teleport beacon, and remind you what you need to press in order to get Tiny Pete to you.

"Misaka, go ahead and get Tiny Pete outfitted for maximum firepower. You need to do that, right?" Souji says after a moment. Misaka snaps something at him in Russian, but turns back to you with a sullen expression. "Useless brother is right. Misaka needs to make sure Tiny Pete is properly equipped, and...must do so now, or Big Sister..."

She suddenly hugs you, tightly.

"Please bring Big Sister Murderface back."

"I have no idea what went on with those two," Souji murmurs as he gently shifts a now-somnolent Kharn on the couch, making her lie comfortably, metal limbs and all. "Misaka suddenly just called and bragged about how she'd finally found her person. Sounded like an awful role model to be honest, confirmed it when she came here with you. I don't approve, but..." He shrugs. "Misaka likes her, and it's obvious I can't do anything about that." Straightening, Souji nods at you. "Right, you're sure you want to go alone? Do you need something to take there with you?"

Bandages or something to stop excessive bleeding comes to mind. If you have any hilariously dangerous experimental weaponry, that would be nice as well.

Also, perhaps some sort of mannequin or such. With some meat; the bloodier the better. It might be more effective to use Callidus powers to "paste" on images on a pre-existing solid frame than trying to conjure images out of thin air.

You're pretty sure, yes. But you could use a couple of Grief Seeds, at least. Just in case. And...probably a few syringes of the stuff he just injected into Kharn, whatever that was. It seemed to calm her down fast enough.

Souji nods at this. "I can do that. Two Grief Seeds, and I'll do you one better by giving you a hypogun of the stuff. I'll load it with four doses, but you'll only need one. Don't give her another dose if it doesn't seem to work at first - just give it time, and she'll drop." He looks back down at the now-comatose former Warmaster. "...Right, let's go. We don't have time to dawdle."

You follow him to the Elevator, where the lift was already waiting. You take one last look back at Kharn.

You're not sure if it was just a trick of the light, but you could have sworn you saw her lips curl into something like a smile.

The Elevator takes you one floor down, exactly, and Souji all but tears out of the lift even before the doors had fully opened. You run after him into what looks like a long, straight corridor leading to a sterile-white room at the very end, with a raised circular platform at the very center. There are other machines in the room as well, and you could spy something like a tall, golden throne at one corner. A dusty prop skeleton with googly eyes is sitting comically in it, manipulated into a pose of someone straining to take a number two.

Cute. Really cute.

"Platform. Go." Souji snaps at you, and you immediately obey, clambering on top of the metal platform and standing in the middle of it. You see him bustle about the machines, kicking some to life, while jabbing buttons furiously on top of some others. The lights in the room flicker, predating a collective whine from the machines - and it's then that Souji tosses you the items you asked for. A black case with two grief seeds locked inside of it, and a hypogun. Four charges, like he promised.

"This is going to be rough! You'll be sick all over yourself when you get there, so, uh, maybe lean forward, or something?" Souji shouts at you over the din the machines are making. You pale at the idea of meeting your sempai with sick all over your front, but...well. You're saving her ass, so she probably wouldn't mind.

Once. Well. Technically one hundred percent on the time, right? When was that?

"When I saved Kharn!"

...Right. Well. It could be worse.

"Ready?"

You give him a thumbs up, and close your eyes. The Grief Seeds in your pocket, the hypnogun gripped in your other hand. Your Soul Gem held tightly with your other hand, Misaka's teleport beacon strapped tightly to your wrist there.

Maybe this was a bad decision, but you've certainly made worse.

If anything else, you'll die trying to save your sempai. And that's not bad at all, is it?

"Initiating Teleportation!"

You feel absolutely, disgustingly horrible.

Cold and hot, all at the same time, as if you've recently spent some quality time inside a microwave. Your insides feeling like they've been boiled to mush, while your skin feels like it's been flash-frozen stiff.

You crack your eyes open, and what you see isn't...well, it isn't the Interrogation Room. It's certainly not anywhere near Siberia. The air isn't cold enough, biting enough. You do smell smoke, though. Something burning, or at least incinerated long ago.

You manage to pull yourself into a sitting position. Your fingers are still curled over your Soul Gem, and the Teleport Beacon is still there, strapped to your wrist, albeit a tiny bit singed. It's still working, though, that's the main thing--

You look around, and realize that you know where you are. Suddenly, you do.

You're in Mitakihara.

Or what used to be Mitakihara.

Downtown. You could...you could recognize all the buildings. Well, most of them still standing. The rest seems to have been reduced to rubble by something. Something razed the city to the ground, and then flooded it in a crippling deluge.

Overhead, the gigantic form of a cackling nightmare is blotting out the sun.

What...what kind of Barrier was this? Was this what Mirai truly wanted? Was this her dream, perverted by her becoming a Witch?

"Silly broccolihead." A cheerful voice pipes up next to you, and you turn to see someone you had fervently prayed you would not see anymore.

The girl with the pink hair and the sunless eyes.

"This isn't your friend's barrier." She giggles at you.

"It's Homura-chan's."

How do you respond?

Yeah, see that's not actually an argument, champ. Emoticons might be technically redundant with the imageboard format, but that doesn't explain your childish, foaming-at-the-mouth rage. It can't be that easy to make people like you throw a tantrum over it without there being something else, can it?

So what is it? Is there something else, or do you just have crippling, delusional anger issues?

4chan was something like a refuge against normalfags and people widely described as "gaiafags" - people who loved using emoticons.

That is why, 4chan uses image macros instead of emoticons. The site became a place where not using emoticons makes your posts seem more valid. People got used to that and even If emoting side is not a 13yo anymore, the hate remains.

Currently, not using emoticons is just common courtesy

The problem with emoticons isn't that this is an imageboard, but that they muddle your sentences with unnecessary breaks and symbols.
Additionally, emoticons are associated with younger internet-goers.
I recommend lurking the boards more before making your next post.

Now will you kindly shut the fuck up?

It brings in the wrong crowd, breaks the readability of the text and discourages clear, concise communication in favor of SMS talk.

In short, things we have seen take over like a plague in recent years and which we are trying to keep away from.

Shit's just in bad taste and brings back bad memories.

And before you say we take things too seriously: Look at all the boards that decided not to.

Again, I'm gonna point out just how ridiculous and out-of-proportion the reaction is to something so simple. You're comparing a mentally-damaged war veteran to posting a simple smiley face in a community that doesn't usually use them.

Does that make you mentally damaged too then? Why else would there be so much rage? Is it so hard to turn the other cheek?

For those talking about just shutting up and adapting, no. Why accept the status quo when it's based on the act of hating things? And inb4 "just leave", I actually like the community on /tg/ for its other aspects, I just can't abide by how wilfuly sociopathic it can be sometimes, for completely bewildering reasons.

Some of them have alliances with each other, some are rivals, others are sworn enemies. You have to really see each Officio as sort of a large business, and the Incubators their CEOs. Their employees may not like each other very much, but it rarely comes to blows when the CEOs are concerned.
Except for Jyuubey, which is I hope I've portrayed as something of an underground movement thing. He's actually more of an outcast. But they do have that 'all Incubators are my brothers' kinda deal.

Coobie implied that he just has the ablity to grant the girls their wishes but the wish itself is pretty much powered by the Girl`s Karma.

Since Homura jumped from timeline to timeline to save Madoka so many times and failed many times the negative Karma surrounding Madoka accumulated everytime.
Also: The more power a wish has, the more powerful the magical girl will be, but on the other hand the harder will the backlash from the wish be and the harder it will fuck you over.
Powerful wish/powerful meguca also means powerful witch.
I think it was even implied that Walpurgisnacht was made out of several megucas or that the megucas she defeated became part of her.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you have no idea what to do.

Your name is Hanegawa Midori. You have your mother's green hair, and your father's red eyes. You absolutely detest the sight and scent of instant noodles, and have very nearly come to blows with a former colleague who had the gall to compare the junk to an honest-to-goodness homemade bowl of ramen. You are your father's only daughter. All your brothers have followed in his footsteps, and the less said about them the better.

Your wish was a stupid one, and you always cringe at the memory of it. You made that wish on your fifteenth birthday, two years ago, and you've always regretted it.

You are rank Callidus, and you have never killed anyone in your brief tour of service. You've always lied about that to everyone. Including her.

It's not that you're afraid to, or never had the opportunity.

You just didn't want blood on your hands, that's all. You didn't want to add someone's death to your mounting pile of sins.

Yes, you're fully aware that gives anyone - including her - free license to call you a host of dreadful names. Hypocrite being one of them.

Names well deserved. You won't deny that.

Your consolation, at least, is that they can never call you murderer.

But you would deprive yourself of that small solace if it meant saving her life.

Just like she spared yours.

>>21931774

You don't remember much after the...incident. It's a blur of red light, panic, with the alarm klaxons screaming in your ear. You found yourself helping a hobbling Kharn back into the living quarters floor, the former Warmaster coughing up horrible amounts of black blood. The sirens have yet to stop ringing in your ears, even though they're muffled in the living quarters itself. Sirens - and the faint echo of who you recognize as Chiaki screaming.

Souji is the first to greet you, his face ashen, grim. He takes the stricken Valnikov off your hands, and it's a slight relief. Kharn was as heavy as her metallic limbs made her look, and you were not trained to haul someone as . For someone shorter and slighter than the former Warmaster, he is able to carry her to a nearby couch.

She is incoherent, desperate, not at all herself. She is half-mumbling, half-growling in Russian, in English, in Japanese. Sometimes she talks in a language you have never heard before- and from how each syllable seemed to rasp deep in her throat, it is not something you want to hear again.

You force yourself not to grab her by the throat and throttle her. You force yourself not to get carried away. You want to ask what happened in that room, before the worst came to be. You want to ask her what kind of lunacy drove the both of them - former and present Warmaster - to even consider doing something so idiotic with a Soul Gem.

"Kharn. Kharn, please focus. Please." Souji is pleading with her now, hands grasping her shoulders. "Focus! What happened? We need to know, if we're going to get Matsuda out of there. Kharn, please--"

"The...the Blessed Lady is displeased," The black-haired former Warmaster babbles, her black, crimson-pinned eyes wide and staring. "She is displeasd with the heresy we've committed upon her Chosen. She is trying to take her back. The Incubator's meddling proved to be a timely distraction...to bring the Chosen back to the Eightfold Path."

She's spouting nonsense. You don't even understand it.

Behind you, you hear Misaka calling your name, calling Souji's. She does not call Kharn.

What do you do?

[]Slap Kharn. Get her to say something you understand.

You bite back the urge to give the delirious russian a slap. While it would definitely be satisfying - you haven't really liked how she could be so carefree, so easygoing, with Chiaki's situation - you didn't think you had time to indulge in something like that. She probably wouldn't approve, either, when you finally manage to rescue her. Not if, but when.

Instead, you ask Souji about what needs to be done. What the options in this situation are. Surely, with a base like this, they'd have contingencies for just about any situation, right? The base is prepared for something like this, isn't it?

"What the hell do you think?" Souji snaps at you, an ugly scowl contorting his features - and it's then that he turns away, reaching up to clamp his hand over his eyes. "Y-yes. Sorry about that. Yes. Right." He takes his hand away and turns back to you. "The Interrogation Room as it is now is sealed. We've got wards activated along the walls and doors; the Witch won't be able to escape or spread its Barrier beyond the boundaries of the room itself. It's sealed in."

Right. Along with Chiaki. He has a plan to get her out, right? Something in this facility should be able to pluck her out of that room and into safety, right?

Right?

"No." Souji shakes his head. "We don't. The short-range teleporter was supposed to do that, but something kept Matsuda back. Something didn't want her to leave." He looks back at Kharn, who seems to be crying blood now. He has taken off his lab coat and was now using it to keep her face clean. "Jesus Christ, Kharn. Don't do this. Not now."

>>21932079

What can you do now, then? How can you get Chiaki out? Can't he try and teleport her out of that mess?

"If she was still in the room, yes," Souji replies. "She's in the Witch Barrier now. Getting a teleportation lock on her would be impossible. I know, I've tried it once." He swallows audibly as he continues to try and keep Kharn's face clean of the evil-smelling blood trickling out of her eyes. "There's only one way - someone to teleport in and dispatch the Witch from inside. That'll deactivate the barrier and we'll be able to get Chiaki out."

That's...that's the only way?

"If you've got a better idea, I'm all ears. The failsafe against these things, I'm trying to make sure that she doesn't go berserk like the last time." He gestures at Kharn, useless and babbling and crying.

...That's just swell. Really.

"Yeah, it's perfect. I know, right?"

It's then that you feel a small hand tugging at your sleeve, and you turn to look at Misaka.

"Big Sister Murderface is in trouble, Misaka will help," The brown-haired girl says, a strange light glinting in her eyes. "...Misaka will teleport inside Witch Barrier and save Big Sister! Misaka will do it, guaranteed!"

"Misaka, don't be stupid--"

"QUIET, USELESS OLDER BROTHER! MISAKA WILL PROVE HERE THAT SHE IS SMARTER AND BETTER THAN YOU! TINY PETE WILL HELP MISAKA RESCUE BIG SISTER!"

How do you respond?

You look at Misaka, and shake your head briefly, a small smile on your face. You haven't really asked your sempai just what had happened between her and Misaka for both of them to have such a bond, such a connection. Whatever it was, it must've been something, to inspire this little girl - a little girl with a robot, but a little girl nonetheless - to be so ready to jump into the jaws of death to save your unreliable sempai that she pre-empted you.

You're supposed to be the creepy, obsessed fangirl here, and you're being upstaged by a cute russian girl with the barest grasp of grammar and syntax. You should be ashamed, Hanegawa Midori. Ashamed.

You put a stop to the beginnings of a shouting match between siblings by placing your hands on Misaka's shoulders. From what you've learned of Chiaki, Misaka wanted to be talked to as an equal - but at the same time, she loathed being patronized. She wanted you to talk to her as a person, not as a liability. She'd worked hard enough to prove that she was anything but.

You tell her that Big Sister Murderface, as ill-mannered as she was, would not forgive you for letting Misaka endanger herself. Big Sister Murderface would certainly not like it if her younger sister was hurt in your rescue attempt, and you would be out of a job then. Worse, Big Sister Murderface would probably hurt you.

"N-no! Big Sister Murderface wouldn't do something like that!" Misaka shakes her head furiously. "B-besides, Tiny Pete will protect Misaka, and--"

I would have thought magical girls would have an inherently different magical signature or aura or whatever from witches. Are we certain Midori's illusions are good enough to fool them?

...no, it is not?

Kinda like Uranium leaves behind lead or wood leaves behind coal.

In addition to that, it stands to reason that even WITH plot-induced stupidity some MG would have tried that in the past.

Polite sage for meta discussion and smartassery.

You glance at Kharn, then back at Misaka, before making your decision. It's...you wish you could have had more time to decide, to think things through, but time is a luxury you don't quite have. Not with your sempai in this...literal worst-case scenario.

You'll be going alone, you tell both Misaka and Souji. It's the most logical decision at the moment. Misaka going in with you is right out. Having Tiny Pete with you at the outset would certainly help, but you're worried that his presence would draw too much attention early in the search for your sempai. Kharn, well...what is happening to her, anyway?

"I'll explain when you get back." Souji pulls out what looks to be a syringe of silver liquid from the depths of his coat. With clean, practiced movements, he injects the fluid directly into Kharn's neck, and immediately the cringing, sobbing former Warmaster seems to relax. Seems to slacken. "I'll have to get her into a Silent Room soon. She'll be alright, but she needs time to recover."

You turn to Misaka and nod, managing to work up a smile. You were just getting to him.

Is there some way you could signal for Tiny Pete to teleport to you, once you've found Chiaki? Or just to bail you out in case you find yourself compromised?

Misaka's eyes widen at this. She can't nod fast enough.

"Y-yes! Misaka has teleport beacon! Misaka will give you personal one!" She pulls back the sleeve of her lab coat to reveal a rather bulky digital watch, the sort you'd see kids wear. She nearly tears it off to give it to you. "J-just press this button, and Tiny Pete will be there in two seconds!"

Two seconds. That's...that's pretty fast.

Can Tiny Pete teleport out of a Witch Barrier himself? Can he take people with him?

"Misaka...Misaka hasn't really tested it," Misaka says after a moment, sheepish. "Do not have the opportunity yet. B-but, maybe, um...if Tiny Pete has a passenger inside, just one, teleportation can work. B-but have not tested it inside Witch Barrier..."

But it could work? Theoretically?

"Theoretically, it...it should," The young woman is clearly hesitant to answer. "But, it could be too dangerous--"

"Don't try it, is what she's trying to say." Souji cuts in. "Don't try to be a hero. Get in, waste that Witch, get back out. That's what Magical Girls are for, aren't they?"

"STUPID SOUJI! WAS EXPLAINING! TINY PETE IS MINE!"

Alright, alright, there's no need to shout. You distract Misaka from another shouting match by asking her to help you put on the teleport beacon, and remind you what you need to press in order to get Tiny Pete to you.

"Misaka, go ahead and get Tiny Pete outfitted for maximum firepower. You need to do that, right?" Souji says after a moment. Misaka snaps something at him in Russian, but turns back to you with a sullen expression. "Useless brother is right. Misaka needs to make sure Tiny Pete is properly equipped, and...must do so now, or Big Sister..."

She suddenly hugs you, tightly.

"Please bring Big Sister Murderface back."

You are barely able to frame a proper resonse before she runs away, back to the Elevator.

"I have no idea what went on with those two," Souji murmurs as he gently shifts a now-somnolent Kharn on the couch, making her lie comfortably, metal limbs and all. "Misaka suddenly just called and bragged about how she'd finally found her person. Sounded like an awful role model to be honest, confirmed it when she came here with you. I don't approve, but..." He shrugs. "Misaka likes her, and it's obvious I can't do anything about that." Straightening, Souji nods at you. "Right, you're sure you want to go alone? Do you need something to take there with you?"

Bandages or something to stop excessive bleeding comes to mind. If you have any hilariously dangerous experimental weaponry, that would be nice as well.

Also, perhaps some sort of mannequin or such. With some meat; the bloodier the better. It might be more effective to use Callidus powers to "paste" on images on a pre-existing solid frame than trying to conjure images out of thin air.

You're pretty sure, yes. But you could use a couple of Grief Seeds, at least. Just in case. And...probably a few syringes of the stuff he just injected into Kharn, whatever that was. It seemed to calm her down fast enough.

Souji nods at this. "I can do that. Two Grief Seeds, and I'll do you one better by giving you a hypogun of the stuff. I'll load it with four doses, but you'll only need one. Don't give her another dose if it doesn't seem to work at first - just give it time, and she'll drop." He looks back down at the now-comatose former Warmaster. "...Right, let's go. We don't have time to dawdle."

You follow him to the Elevator, where the lift was already waiting. You take one last look back at Kharn.

You're not sure if it was just a trick of the light, but you could have sworn you saw her lips curl into something like a smile.

The Elevator takes you one floor down, exactly, and Souji all but tears out of the lift even before the doors had fully opened. You run after him into what looks like a long, straight corridor leading to a sterile-white room at the very end, with a raised circular platform at the very center. There are other machines in the room as well, and you could spy something like a tall, golden throne at one corner. A dusty prop skeleton with googly eyes is sitting comically in it, manipulated into a pose of someone straining to take a number two.

Cute. Really cute.

"Platform. Go." Souji snaps at you, and you immediately obey, clambering on top of the metal platform and standing in the middle of it. You see him bustle about the machines, kicking some to life, while jabbing buttons furiously on top of some others. The lights in the room flicker, predating a collective whine from the machines - and it's then that Souji tosses you the items you asked for. A black case with two grief seeds locked inside of it, and a hypogun. Four charges, like he promised.

"This is going to be rough! You'll be sick all over yourself when you get there, so, uh, maybe lean forward, or something?" Souji shouts at you over the din the machines are making. You pale at the idea of meeting your sempai with sick all over your front, but...well. You're saving her ass, so she probably wouldn't mind.

"Pretty sure! I've tried it once before!"

"When I saved Kharn!"

...Right. Well. It could be worse.

"Ready?"

You give him a thumbs up, and close your eyes. The Grief Seeds in your pocket, the hypnogun gripped in your other hand. Your Soul Gem held tightly with your other hand, Misaka's teleport beacon strapped tightly to your wrist there.

Maybe this was a bad decision, but you've certainly made worse.

If anything else, you'll die trying to save your sempai. And that's not bad at all, is it?

"Initiating Teleportation!"

You hear a thousand voices screaming at once, breathing in the scent of fire and brimstone as it fills your nostrils - and the world disappears in a sudden, migraine-bright explosion of light.

...

You feel absolutely, disgustingly horrible.

Cold and hot, all at the same time, as if you've recently spent some quality time inside a microwave. Your insides feeling like they've been boiled to mush, while your skin feels like it's been flash-frozen stiff.

You crack your eyes open, and what you see isn't...well, it isn't the Interrogation Room. It's certainly not anywhere near Siberia. The air isn't cold enough, biting enough. You do smell smoke, though. Something burning, or at least incinerated long ago.

You manage to pull yourself into a sitting position. Your fingers are still curled over your Soul Gem, and the Teleport Beacon is still there, strapped to your wrist, albeit a tiny bit singed. It's still working, though, that's the main thing--

You look around, and realize that you know where you are. Suddenly, you do.

You're in Mitakihara.

Or what used to be Mitakihara.

Downtown. You could...you could recognize all the buildings. Well, most of them still standing. The rest seems to have been reduced to rubble by something. Something razed the city to the ground, and then flooded it in a crippling deluge.

Overhead, the gigantic form of a cackling nightmare is blotting out the sun.

What...what kind of Barrier was this? Was this what Mirai truly wanted? Was this her dream, perverted by her becoming a Witch?

"Silly broccolihead." A cheerful voice pipes up next to you, and you turn to see someone you had fervently prayed you would not see anymore.

The girl with the pink hair and the sunless eyes.

"This isn't your friend's barrier." She giggles at you.

"It's Homura-chan's."

How do you respond?

Because, my dear friends, leet culture stopped being relevant ages ago.
In time, emoticons became popular with people best described as obnoxious.
4chan was something like a refuge against normalfags and people widely described as "gaiafags" - people who loved using emoticons.

That is why, 4chan uses image macros instead of emoticons. The site became a place where not using emoticons makes your posts seem more valid. People got used to that and even If emoting side is not a 13yo anymore, the hate remains.

Currently, not using emoticons is just common courtesy

The problem with emoticons isn't that this is an imageboard, but that they muddle your sentences with unnecessary breaks and symbols.
"I don't get it. Care to explain?" is sufficient, and is a lot more pleasant to look at than "I don't get it. @_@"
Additionally, emoticons are associated with younger internet-goers.
I recommend lurking the boards more before making your next post.

Now will you kindly shut the fuck up?

It brings in the wrong crowd, breaks the readability of the text and discourages clear, concise communication in favor of SMS talk.

In short, things we have seen take over like a plague in recent years and which we are trying to keep away from.

Shit's just in bad taste and brings back bad memories.

And before you say we take things too seriously: Look at all the boards that decided not to.

Again, I'm gonna point out just how ridiculous and out-of-proportion the reaction is to something so simple. You're comparing a mentally-damaged war veteran to posting a simple smiley face in a community that doesn't usually use them.

Does that make you mentally damaged too then? Why else would there be so much rage? Is it so hard to turn the other cheek?

For those talking about just shutting up and adapting, no. Why accept the status quo when it's based on the act of hating things? And inb4 "just leave", I actually like the community on /tg/ for its other aspects, I just can't abide by how wilfuly sociopathic it can be sometimes, for completely bewildering reasons.

I will, it makes me feel warm and happy even though realistically I of course know and accept I'm not going to change the way anybody acts. Everybody's got their own thang.

Some of them have alliances with each other, some are rivals, others are sworn enemies. You have to really see each Officio as sort of a large business, and the Incubators their CEOs. Their employees may not like each other very much, but it rarely comes to blows when the CEOs are concerned.
Except for Jyuubey, which is I hope I've portrayed as something of an underground movement thing. He's actually more of an outcast. But they do have that 'all Incubators are my brothers' kinda deal.

The explanation was more of a sidenote.

Coobie implied that he just has the ablity to grant the girls their wishes but the wish itself is pretty much powered by the Girl`s Karma.

Since Homura jumped from timeline to timeline to save Madoka so many times and failed many times the negative Karma surrounding Madoka accumulated everytime.
Also: The more power a wish has, the more powerful the magical girl will be, but on the other hand the harder will the backlash from the wish be and the harder it will fuck you over.
Powerful wish/powerful meguca also means powerful witch.
I think it was even implied that Walpurgisnacht was made out of several megucas or that the megucas she defeated became part of her.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 12/09/12(Sun)07:15 No.21960657

Not the best start for a rescue mission.

The first thing to greet you is the most hellish landscape imaginable: the ruined, flooded remnants of the city that you've lived in most of your life.

It's the pink-haired girl that's haunted your nightmares ever since you met her that one night. The demonic pink-haired girl with the black eyes that belonged more on a bloodthirsty shark than anywhere else.

And to add to that, she'd just confirmed that this barrier - the barrier that you've willingly allowed yourself to be teleported into - belongs to the stupid, unreliable, amnesiac sempai that you're supposed to be rescuing.

You're not sure if you could deal with this.

You're not sure if you could deal with this at all.

>> ☐ Deculture 12/09/12(Sun)07:17 No.21960672

>>21960657

It took you a few seconds to figure it out. She used a strange name for your sempai, who you're familiar with as Chiaki Matsuda. The pink-haired terror had called her Homura-chan - the same name she'd called your sempai when you encountered her in your own illusion, moments before she shattered it.

Homura-chan. It's...it's a pretty name, certainly. Cooler-sounding than Chiaki. Maybe you could use it for a side story, or something. It has potential.

You just hope you get the chance to. What with your being inside a Witch Barrier and needing to rescue Chiaki on top of everything else.

Forcing the stab of fear and panic down - as well as the all-too-powerful impulse to run as fast as you can in the opposite direction - it's then that you pull yourself up to your feet, before turning slowly to face the only other occupant in the barrier. Willing yourself to look into her tar-black eyes, so black that you could easily see yourself reflected in both of them.

You manage to ask her, after a few false starts and her tilting her head to the side questioningly - like a cat - questions that you've been meaning to ask.

Where is Chiaki? Where is your sempai?

What's happened to her?

And why is she doing this to her?

It takes her a few moments to respond, her quizzical expression twisting into a disappointed pout. Her eyebrows furrowing delicately. Looking as if you've just asked her a barrage of distasteful questions about her dress sense, which, honestly, is really pushing the pink color scheme a bit too far. Well, the black ribbons are a bit of a nice offset--

[1/2]

"...Are you mental? Stop calling Homura-chan that stupid, silly nickname! It doesn't even fit! Chi-ya-kee...no! It's not as cool as Homura! I don't want to hear it ever again!" She stomps the ground with a black mary-janed foot, and you nearly stumble as the entire world seems to rock with the impact. "Homura-chan is Homura-chan, and I won't have you calling her strange names!"

The tremors stop after a while, with the pink-haired monstrosity looking quite cross with you. F-fine, fine, Homura. Whatever. You just want to find out where she is--

"She's here, of course! Where else do you think she'd be, if we're both inside her barrier?!" The girl throws her gloved hands up into the air in frustration. "Those stupid alien cats seriously need to pick their contractees better, they'll just pick any riffraff off the street just to get their quotas met! Any magical girl worth their Soul Gem knows that the Witch is always at the center of the Barrier, which is in that direction--"

She makes to raise a gloved hand to wrathfully gesticulate at the falling standards of Magical Girls today, when she suddenly stops - and narrows her sunless gaze at you, the scowl on her face deepening.

You involuntarily step back at this, and you make the mistake of blinking.

In that brief moment where you closed your eyes and opened them in the same heartbeat, she'd disappeared from her spot five feet away from you.

And reappeared right in your face.

"Why are you asking?" The girl all but growls, the unclean edge of long-lost sanity tainting her words. The scent of something...chokingly sweet and sugary in her breath, permeating her entire presence. "Why are you trying to find her? ARE YOU AFTER HOMURA-CHAN TOO?!"

You...you can't help but feel that you should be careful how you reply here.

How do you respond?

"Oh, is that it?" Just like that, the pink-haired girl's mood seems to turn a complete a hundred and eighty degrees - the rather oppressive mood lifted so quickly that it's almost like a switch was flipped somewhere. It's then that she hops back a step, twintails and skirt bouncing at the motion, before she clasps both hands in front of her and beams. "If you're just trying to help her than steal her away from me, then we don't have a problem! In fact, we can go look for her together if you want!" She spreads her arms wide. "There's a lot of ground to cover, after all, and even with everything I've got, I doubt I can find her as fast as I'd like to!"

A moment, and it's then that she pouts. "Well, no, I can just tear this barrier apart and find her that way, but...if I do it wrong, then I'd be killing her too, which is BAD. We don't want THAT to happen."

As if to emphasize her point, the monstrous cackle of the hovering nightmare above you echoes throughout the entire barrier, making a few of the ruined buildings collapse at the sheer volume of the unnatural laughter.

"U-uu, forget about that! We can go find her together!" It's then that you feel her gloved hands suddenly snatch one of yours up, clasping it between hers - and you force the reflex of pulling your hand away at the sensation of claws pressing against your skin. Her hands were warm and soft enough, yes, but her touch carried with it a sickening sense of revulsion. "It'll be just like an RPG! You can join my party, and we'll find the missing princess together!" She pauses at this, only to suddenly flush crimson. "W-well, for me, Homura-chan's been more of a prince than anything..."

You...well, there's no other way to say it, but you do have a bad feeling about this.

It's one thing to have yourself thrown into a Barrier to save your sempai, but...to join up with something like her? It makes for a good twist, sure, and you probably could use it in a future volume, but...this person, whoever and whatever she was, had been tormenting your sempai ever since you've met her. The reason why your sempai had always looked so haunted, so miserable, so...defeated.

You are teaming up with the one thing that turned your sempai into the self-loathing wreck that she was. To rescue her from the barrier she'd trapped herself in.

Your response had barely left your lips when the girl seems to almost bounce in manic glee, clasping your hand to her chest. Your fingertips brushing against the bright crimson Soul Gem sitting at the bottom of her throat. "R-Really?! You'll join me in trying to find Homura-chan? This...this is perfect! This is great! I can't believe it, someone's joined my party for once! YAY!"

You're...you're glad that she's pleased about it, but you don't think the party setting fits at all, here. It's not as if this is a game or anything...

"Oh, silly broccolihead! Of course I know that!" The girl pouts, before smiling again. "It's just easier to think about things like this! Homura-chan's always been about taking things seriously to the point that she'd be brooding and quiet a whole lot." She narrows her sharklike eyes and forces her lips into a disgruntled pout. "Like this, all the time, see? Always frowning, looking like the world owes her something. It doesn't help get anything done! Ah, but with the both of us, we'll find Homura-chan in no time flat!"

In any case, you should probably get going, right?

"Well, that's the plan, but first, um..." She turns towards you, a guilty look on her face. "You probably don't like being called broccolihead, right? I'm sorry, I don't really know who you are. M-maybe I did, but I don't remember anymore. I just saw how green your head is and went with it." A moment. "I guess...I guess you can call me Madoka. Madoka-chan, if you want." She manages a small smile. "What should I call you?"

Madoka. That's...you guess that's a cute name.

You were expecting something a bit more...Satanic, or something.

You give her your first name. Midori. She giggles at this.

"Green! Hahaha! Well, I guess that sounds better than a vegetable!" She looks you up and down, as if truly looking at you for the first time. "Hnn...well, you don't look half bad. Chest is way bigger than mine, though, but that's okay, Homura-chan's not into large boobies!"

That stung more than you thought it would.

"Anyway, yes! We should probably start, but..." It's then that she frowns. "I...I know I said something about her being in the center, but...that's the thing. I'm getting at least...four places where she could be, or where the center is. Maybe all of them are, or maybe just one of them." Madoka rubs her temples, as if trying to ease a migraine. "There's a fifth one pulsing out to me, too, but it feels different than Homura...that's probably your friend, if I'm not mistaken."

...Four locations? And Mirai? This...this is going to be more difficult than you thought, isn't it?

You glance at your bulky watch, and then at 'Madoka' - before getting her attention and asking her if it would be okay for you to take the call. Normally you'd probably just answer it, but...it's better to play it safe, right now, than find out the hard way that you've screwed up. She doesn't seem to be bothered much by it though, waving you off and grumbling something about timelines converging. You thank her, and you turn away from her to try and see how in the world could you operate this thing. Without accidentally calling Tiny Pete in.

Thankfully, you remember which button to push when you desperately need the huge robot to come to your rescue - and it's the button you avoid as you try poking a bit at the other ones. A beep, and a voice rendered scratchy by heavy static comes on the tinny speaker. It's...not very loud, but not loud enough for anyone else to overhear.

"Mido--Midori-chan?" It's Misaka's voice. "Midori-chan, can you hear Misaka? Midori-chan, report!"

You hastily reply to the affirmative. Yes, you can hear her, but barely. You're still alive, and where you're supposed to be...you think. What is she calling for?

"A-ah! Was calling to report about Tiny Pete, he is ready for deployment!" A moment. "A-and something else! We know Murderface still has Teleport Beacon, so we tried to track its signal at least!"

...That's great. That's great news!

"It's...but it's strange! We are detecting four signals! It is like there are four beacons instead of one, not counting Midori-chan's!"

And that doesn't help at all. ...Maybe it does to confirm Madoka's guesswork, but are they sure?

"Positive! Tiny Pete cannot lie!"

Well, that's just dandy--

"Midori, hey, Midori!" You feel an impossibly-sharp series of ice-cold claws scritch at the small of your back, through your clothes - and you very nearly have a small accident at the sudden, knee-shaking surprise of it. You turn slowly, and Madoka is there, seemingly eager to get things going. "Quit stalling and let's go already! The nearest Homura-chan's up north! If we're lucky, we can get there before she stops screaming!"

Screaming...? But you don't hear anything...

"Are you deaf? She's practically calling us! Come on!"

"Midori-chan?" The Teleport Beacon's tinny speaker comes alive again. "Midori-chan, useless brother is saying that he is detecting really strong Witch signature near you! Please be careful--"

The connection goes dead before Misaka could finish her sentence, or you to frame a response. You lower the bulky watch, and turn towards the pink-haired girl standing by your side, looking more and more impatient by the second.

"Are you done?" Madoka snaps at you. "Kh, if you weren't sent here to pick up after Homura-chan, I'd leave you to rot and find her myself! Now, let's go! We don't have a moment to lose!"

She points a gloved hand ahead, into the horizon. As soon as she does so, it's then that the barrier seems to subtly shift - and you see a tall, rather modern-looking building rise up from the ground. You've seen it before, and you've always wanted to step into its hallowed halls, just to see what it was like to get the best education money could buy.

Mitakihara Middle School. With the plexiglass walls and automatic seating and everything.

The problem is that the "beast" is jealous super witch who will take offense at being left behind and see it as trying to steal her prey away.

On another note, I want to say that hold off on asking about Mirai depending on how she takes the questions about Chiaki. If she opens up and is friendly, then we can sneak the questions about Mirai in. If she keeps up with the peevish and impatient attitude, skip the questions about Mirai or she might take offense at being distracted from "Homura-chan"

Although I expect that Madoka's pace will probably be as fast as we can go anyway, if not faster.

Do we have some kind of weapon or device like, Kyoko's spears, Sayaka's swords or Homura's shield? I don;t know if it's something every magical girl gets, but if we have something it may be worth getting it ready, or anything else we need to perform our abilities as we're in a witch's barrier
